3. Poemata Londini, 1619, 4to. 4. Philosophia Aristotelicæ Synopsis, Lib. IV. Probably never printed, and perhaps never written; for it is entered on the authority of Dempster, who—if a bull may be excused—is no authority at all.

"Hic Musis, Volusene, jaces carissime, ripam
Ad Rhodani, terra quam procul a patria !
Hoc meruit virtus tua, tellus quæ foret altrix
Virtutum, ut cineres conderet illa tuos."

"To him we owe the determination of the presence of Fluorine in the blood, in milk, and other animal secretions, as well as in the stems of many of those plants which the mammalia use for food. His researches on Colour-Blindness have furnished a complete elucidation and authoritative text-book for that curious subject of inquiry; and his investigations on the action of dry gases on organic colouring-matter are referred to by chemists as important and comprehensive in their bearings. He was referred to by Sir David Brewster, in his Inaugural Address as Principal of the University of Edinburgh, as 'Dr. George Wilson, one of our most distinguished philosophers;' and his death, at the early age of forty-one, was mourned in Scotland as a public loss."—*Daniel Wilson, LL.D., to S. Ever since the first appearance of this famous book we have been collecting materials for the Bibliography of the "Essays and Reviews" Controversy; but, now that we have reached the name under which this was to be recorded, we are sensible that few would excuse us for the appropriation of two columns, in a work devoted to miscellaneous literature, to a special theological controversy, however important.

"Every book now," remarks the London Athenæum, June 8, 1861, 761, "seems to be connected with the 'Essays and Reviews,' either by asserted connection or distinction." Obliged, then, to omit our projected Bibliography of this fruitful theme, we would briefly remark that among the more than fifty volumes and pamphlets (published 1861–65) either elicited by, or more or less connected with, the Essays and Reviews, we find the following avowed authors, (some publications appeared anonymously:) I. Baring, Bishop Charles. II. Beard, Rev. John R. III. Buchanan, James, D.D. IV. Bullock, Rev. Charles. V. Burgon, Rev. John W. VI. Wilson, Horace Hayman, b. in London, 1786, was appointed an Assistant Surgeon on the Bengal Establishment of the East India Company in 1808, and arrived in the same year at Calcutta, where his services were secured in the assay office of the Mint, the duties of which he relieved by a zealous cultivation of Sanskrit literature; after a distinguished career in India, where he not only revived in the natives an interest in their own great authors, but introduced them to the knowledge of European science and English letters, in 1832 he returned to England to accept the Boden professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, which post he retained (acting also as Librarian to the East India Company, a Director of the Royal Asiatic Society, &c.) until his death, May 8, 1860. In 1832 he married a daughter of G. I. Siddons, Esq., (of the Bengal Civil Service,) and grand-daughter of the famous Sarah Siddons, and by this lady he had several children.

Rig-Veda Sanhita: a Collection of Ancient Hindu Hymns, &c.; Translated from the Original Sanskrit, 8vo: vol. i., 1850; 2d ed., by Dr. Fitzedward Hall, 1868, 8vo; ii., 1854; iii., 1857. See Lon. Athen., 1850, 1367, 1857, 1618; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1855, 611; Westm. Rev., April, 1855: Contemp. Lit. These comprise but four Ashtakas, that is, one-half of the collection. (M. Langlois's French version, Paris, 1848–51, 4 vols. 8vo, is the only translation—always an accurate one—of the whole of the Rig-Veda.) The remainder, constituting the Fifth to Eighth Ashtakas, Translated by the late H. H. Wilson, and Edited by E. B. Cowell, M.A., being vol. iv., 1866, v. and vi. in press, 1870, of Wilson's Translation of the Rig-Veda, are published by Trübner & Co., London.

See, also, Rig-Veda Sanhita: the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans, together with the Commentary of Sayanacharya, in Sanskrit, edited by Max Müller, 1849–62, 4 vols. r. 4to, and The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins as Preserved to us in the Oldest Collection of Religious Poetry, the Rig-Veda Sanhita; Translated and Explained by Max Müller, 8 vols. 8vo, vol. i., 1869; also: Original Sanskrit Texts, Illustrative of the Hindus, their Religion and Institutions, Collected, Translated, and Elucidated by J. Muir, D.C.L., 1858–63, 4 vols. 8vo, 2d ed., 1868 et seq., and N. Amer. Rev., April, 1868, on the Veda, by William Dwight Whitney, (q. v.,) of Yale College. While in Berlin, Professor Whitney transcribed the entire Sanskrit MSS. of the Atharva Veda, and subsequently, in connection with Professor Roth, published the text in Berlin. Messrs. Trübner & Co. propose (1870) to issue a new edition of the Sanhita Text of the Rig-

Veda, without the Commentary of the Sayana; to be comprised in about 50 sheets, large 8vo, the text the same as that edited by Max Müller, carefully corrected and revised: see Specimen Page in Trübner's Amer. and Orient. Lit. Record, Dec. 24, 1869, 629. See Quar. Rev., July, 1870.

Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mahommedan Law, 1860, 8vo; 2d ed., 1862, 8vo.

He revised Nala and Damayanti, and other Poems, translated from the Sanscrit by Rev. H. H. Milman, D.D., Oxf., 1835, imp. 8vo; conducted through the press Bopp's Comparative Grammar, translated from the German by E. B. Eastwick, Lon., 1845–50, 3 vols. r. 8vo, 2d ed., complete, 1856, 3 vols. r. 8vo, £3 7*s*. 6*d*., (see Lon. Athen., 1854, 1487, and 1856, 1228;) edited The Calcutta Oriental Magazine and Quarterly Review, continued as The Quarterly Oriental Magazine and Review, both series, 1824 et seq., 8 vols., (see Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 663;) contributed Introductory Lines and Summary Arguments to J. D. Paterson's Odes to the Ragâs, &c., Calcutta, 1818, and descriptive notices to The Oriental Portfolio, Lon., 1841, fol.; and many papers to the Magazines and Reviews just named, and also to Asiatic Researches, Journal of the Society of Bengal, Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society, and Journal of the same, (of which Society he was President,) Transactions of the Ashmolean Society, Foreign Quarterly Review, &c.; and as Secretary to the Committee of Public Instruction, in Calcutta, he superintended and revised the publication of many standard Sanskrit texts. See, also, CAREY, WILLIAM, D.D. Notices of this eminent Orientalist will be found in the Thirty-Seventh Annual Report of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, May, 1860, ii.–x. (by H. T. Prinsep) and xxvi., (by Col. Sykes;) Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug. 1860, 197, (Obituary;) Report of the Société Asiatique for 1860; Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 65, (Obituary,) and ii. 571, (sale of his library;) Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 663, (periodicals edited by him,) and 1865, i. 7, (his Oriental MSS. in the Bodleian Library.)

"It was the distinguishing characteristic of our late Director that he considered nothing unworthy of his labours that was calculated to be useful, and was never influenced in his undertakings by the mere desire of acquiring distinction or increasing his fame. Many of these works exhibit powers of illustration and close reasoning which will place their author in a high position among the literary men of the age. But it is as a man of deep research, and as a Sanscrit scholar and Orientalist, as the successor of Sir William Jones and H. T. Colebrooke, the worthy wearer of their mantles, and inheritor of the pre-eminence they enjoyed in this particular department of literature, that his name will especially live among the eminent men of learning of his age and country."—H. T. PRINSEP: ubi supra, vi.

Of Trübner & Co.'s collective edition of Wilson's Works, in 8vo, the following is the classification as far as announced: Volumes i., ii., Essays and Lectures, chiefly on the Religion of the Hindus; Collected and Edited by Dr. Reinhold Rost, of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, 1862.

Volumes iii., iv., v., Essays, Analytical, Critical, and Philological, on Subjects connected with Sanskrit Literature; Collected and Edited by Dr. Reinhold Rost, 1864. Volumes vi., vii., viii., ix., x., xi., Vishnu-Purana, ut supra, No. 9. Volumes xii., xiii., xiv., xv., xvi., xvii., Rig-Veda Sanhita, ut supra, No. 16, are to follow. For the Boden Professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, vacated by Wilson's death, there were three competitors,—the late Principal James R. Ballantyne, LL.D., of the College of Benares, (formerly Librarian of the India Office,) Max Müller, and Monier Williams, (we name them alphabetically:) the choice fell on the last-named. Since our notice of Müller's works was stereotyped, he has published several others, viz.:

I. The German Classics, from the Fourth to the Nineteenth Century; a German Reading-Book, &c., Lon., 1858, p. 8vo; also 1858, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

II. A History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature so far as it illustrates the Primitive Religion of the Brahmans, Lon., 1859, 8vo; 2d ed., 1860, 8vo.

"A work every page of which teems with information that no other scholar ever has, or could have, placed before the public. . . . The work must ever hold a foremost place, not only in the history of India, but in that of the human race."—PROF. HORACE H. WILSON: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1860.

"The structure, classification, and description of birds are passed through in the able manner we have had the pleasure of commending in Mr Wilson's volume. . . . The Plates are in much the same excellent style as in preceding volumes."—The Naturalist, edited by Neville Wood.

To the seventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, 1830–1842, he furnished, with the assistance of other writers, all the articles on natural history: these, as revised and enlarged, chiefly by himself, make in the eighth edition (1852–1860) upwards of 900 pages. They comprise Angling, Animal Kingdom, Animalcule, Bee, Entomology, Fisheries, Helminthology, Mammalia, Ornithology, and Reptilia. The Life of Edward Forbes is also his. See Lon. Quar. Rev., lxx. 58, and Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi. (1860) 876: Wilson, James. From the seventh edition were republished: 7. The Rod and the Gun: being two Treatises on Angling and Shooting; the former by James Wilson, the latter by the Author of the "Oakleigh Shooting Code," 1840, p. 8vo; new ed., 1844, p. 8vo.

"Amusingly written, and complete in all its parts."—Preface to Days and Nights of Salmon-Fishing, by William Scrope.

Wilson, John, ("Christopher North,") the son of a cloth-manufacturer, who left him a fortune (but little of which he was able to secure) of about £30,000, was b. at Paisley, Scotland, May 18, 1785, and studied at the University of Glasgow from 1789 to 1804, and at Magdalene College, Oxford, (where in 1806 he gained the fifty-guinea Newdigate Prize by a poem on Painting, Poetry, and Architecture,) from 1804 to 1808, and in the latter year purchased the beautiful estate of Ellerlay, in Cumberland, where he found congenial society in the men of letters who dwelt amidst the scenery of the Lakes; was enrolled among the advocates of the Scotch Bar in 1814, but soon abandoned, if he can be said to have ever adopted, the legal profession; contributed his stanzas of The Magic Mirror (in which Scott is described as The Great Magician) to The Annual Register in 1812; in the same year published anonymously an elegy on the death of James Grahame, (see p. 716, supra,) which excited the admiration of Joanna Baillie, (see Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. xxiii.,) and also gave to the world The Isle of Palms, and other Poems; became a contributor to Blackwood's Magazine with No. 7, October, 1817, and continued his connection with this periodical, (acting as literary editor, whilst Blackwood himself managed the business department,) writing with more or less frequency, until September, 1852, No. 443, in which appeared his last paper, Dies Boreales, No. X., Christopher Under Canvas; in 1820 succeeded Dr. Thomas Brown as Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, (see Hamilton, Sir William,) and held this position until 1852, when he retired on a pension from the crown of £200 per annum; d. at Edinburgh, April 3, 1854. In 1811 he married Miss Jane Penny, the daughter of a Liverpool merchant: he was called to mourn her loss in 1837. He left four daughters, all married to men of note: Lord Neaves, Sheriff Gordon, Professor John Ferrier, of St. Andrews, and Professor W. A. Aytoun, of Edinburgh. 1. The Isle of Palms, and other Poems, Edin., 1812, 8vo, pp. 415; N. York, 1812, 12mo. Also in No. 6. The Isle of Palms is a story of two lovers that were wrecked in the Indian Sea, and saved, when all the rest of the ship's company were drowned, on an uninhabited lovely island; and of their residence there for six or seven years, and final return home, with their young daughter, by means of an English ship of war, that opportunely, though rather late, came to their relief.

"This is a new recruit to the company of lake poets, and one who, from his present bearing, promises, we think, not only to do them good service, and to rise to high honours in the corps, but to raise its name and advance its interests even among the tribes of the unbelievers."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xix. (Feb. 1812) 373.

"Better models and more caution in composing might perhaps raise Mr. Wilson's name to a rank little inferior to that of the most popular poets of the day."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1812, ii. 36.

"It exhibits scenes of enchanting beauty; a prodigality of loveliness united to uncommon sweetness and tranquil grace."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit.

2. The City of the Plague, and other Poems, Edin., 1816, 8vo, pp. 299; 2d ed., 1820, 8vo. Also in No. 6. The City of the Plague is partly founded on De Foe's graphic Journal of the Plague in London.

"Wilson never did well till he set up for himself in the 'City of the Plague.'"—Lord Byron, in 1820: Moore's Life of Byron, ii., under Letter CCCXCV. See, also, his Preface to Marino Faliero.

"Almost the only passions with which his poetry is conversant are the gentler sympathies of our nature,—tender compassion, confiding affection, and guiltless sorrow. From all this there results, along with a most touching and tranquillizing sweetness, a certain monotony and languor, which, to those who read poetry for amusement merely, will be apt to appear like dullness, and must be felt as a defect by all who have been used to the variety, rapidity, and energy of the more popular poetry of the day. The poetry before us, on the other hand, is almost entirely contemplative or descriptive."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xxvi. (June, 1816) 461.

"He fully deserves to be cured of that inveterate disorder of bad taste which is now clinging to every joint about him."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1816, i. 245.

"A noble and deeply pathetic poem. . . . His most dolorous scenes are redeemed back to our sympathy by inimitable touches of nature; and we rise from the spell of perusal sobered and elevated."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit.

Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life: a Selection from the Papers of the Late Arthur Austin, 1822, p. 8vo, pp. 430; 1839, fp. 8vo; 1844, fp. 8vo; Phila., 18mo; N York, 1849, 12mo; 1854, 12mo; Edin., 1866, fp. 8vo. This volume consists of 24 short tales, three of which (The Elder's Funeral, The Snow-Storm, and the Foragers) had previously been published in Blackwood's Magazine.

"We have already said a word or two on this delightful volume,—the work of one of the highest and most amiable of contemporary minds,—a genius which shines with equal felicity in the tender and the humourous."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

"Every page overflows with images of the most pure and beautiful tenderness. Occasionally he displays a deep knowledge of the sterner and more troubled passions. His faults are the faults of exuberance,—never of poverty."—Blackw. Mag., ii. (June, 1822) 677. See, also, xiii. 549.

"A book not very natural, but bright with the lines of poetry."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xxxix. (Oct. 1823) 180, and in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 715.

"In descriptions of natural scenery the powers of the author are of no ordinary sort. . . . It everywhere inculcates the purest morality and the most sincere piety in every situation and circumstance, whether of good or ill fortune."—Blackw. Mag., xiii. (May, 1823) 557.

"It is very beautiful and tender; but something cloying, perhaps, in the uniformity of its beauty, and exceedingly oppressive in the unremitting weight of the pity with which it presses on our souls."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xxxix. (Oct. 1823) 189, and in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 719.

5. The Foresters; by the Author of "Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life," and "The Trials of Margaret Lyndsay," 1825, p. 8vo; Bost., 12mo; N. York, 12mo; Edin., 1839, fp. 8vo; 1845, fp. 8vo; 1852, fp. 8vo; 1867, fp. 8vo.

"This is a very beautifully written volume, though rather too carefully labored into beauty, affecting too unvarying a tone of melancholy sweetness, and obtruding a little too ostentatiously its display of sensibility and amiable feeling."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1825, ii. 88.

Recreations of Christopher North, Edin., 1842, 3 vols. p. 8vo. Also, (being a vol. of the Series of Modern British Essayists, 8 vols. 8vo,) Phila., 8vo, and Bost., 8vo. From Blackwood's Magazine. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., lxxvii. (Feb. 1843) 72, (same in N. York Eclec. Mus., i. 73,) and Fraser's Mag., xxvii. 251.

"It would be difficult to point to three volumes of our own times that have an equal chance of becoming immortal."—Charles Knight: Half-Hours with the Best Authors, No. 95.

Also warmly praised by Lon. Times and the Scotsman.

10. Noctes Ambrosianæ, (from Blackw. Mag., Mar. 1822–Feb. 1835,) Phila., 1843, 4 vols. 12mo. Without a history of the series, notices of the authors, or index,—in all respects a bad edition. The sale to 1854 was about 900 copies.

New edition, with Memoirs and Notes by R. Shelton Mackenzie, D.C.L., Editor of Sheil's "Sketches of the Irish Bar," N. York, August, 1854, 5 vols. 12mo: sale in one year, about 3000 copies; 4th ed., 1857, 4 vols. 12mo. With a history of the series, notices of the authors, and indexes,—in all respects a thoroughly good edition. It was favourably reviewed in The New York Tribune by George Ripley, in the Citizen (New York) by John Savage, and by other critics.

New ed., by Professor Ferrier, Edin., 1855–56, 4 vols. cr. 8vo, (being vols. i.–iv. of Wilson's Works, ut infra.)

"Avowedly omitting all that he believed Wilson had not written, (which included much of what he had,) he printed only thirty-nine out of the whole seventy 'Noctes.' In his preface he very handsomely complimented the American edition as creditable to my 'industry and good sense,' and, moreover, made liberal use of my notes."—Dr. R. S. Mackenzie: Pref. to his ed. of 1863.

Revised ed., by R. S. Mackenzie, D.C.L., N. York, March, 1863, 5 vols. sm. 8vo, tinted laid paper. Same edition, on large paper, together with "Christopher North," a Memoir of John Wilson, by Mrs. Gordon, ut infra, in all, 6 vols. 4to. Alvord's hand-press, 1865, $60; 100 copies. Should accompany the large-paper copies of Dr. Doran's Annals of the English Stage, 1864, 2 vols. 4to, 100 copies; Spooner's Dictionary of Painters and Engravers, 1865, 2 vols. 4to, 100 copies; E. A. Duyckinck's Wit and Wisdom of Sydney Smith, 1865, 4to, 50 copies; Dr. Francis's Old New York, 100 copies; and Freneau's Poems, 100 copies.

"Wilson, I believe, now professes to regret and condemn many things in these papers, and to deny his authorship of them; but substantially they are all his. I have not the slightest doubt that he wrote at least ninety per cent. of them. I wish no man had anything worse to be timid about. There is not so curious and original a work in the English or Scotch languages. It is a most singular and delightful outpouring of criticism, politics, and descriptions of feeling, character, and scenery, of verse and prose, and maudlin eloquence, and especially of wild fun. It breathes the very essence of the Bacchanalian revel of clever men. And its Scotch is the best Scotch that has been written in modern times."—Lord Cockburn: Memorials of his Time, ch. v.

"The Ettrick Shepherd of the 'Noctes Ambrosianæ' is one of the finest and most finished creations which dramatic genius ever called into existence. . . . In wisdom the Shepherd equals the Socrates of Plato; in humour he surpasses the Falstaff of Shakspeare."—Professor Ferrier: Preface to his ed. of Noctes Ambros.

Also commended by Eclec. Rev., Lon. Times, &c.

"Christopher himself had the decency never to reprint these papers, which, apart from the question of their personalities, have scarcely any merit. For the most part they are poor and inflated, heavy, pompous, glittering. The humours are coarse and ephemeral; the serious passages are overdone. When the 'Noctes' appeared, they were thought 'startling;' with here and there an exceptional page, they are now insufferably tedious."—Lon. Athen., 1855, 994.

There has recently been issued a series (not by Professor Wilson) of Tales from Blackwood's Magazine, Edin., 1858–61, 12 vols. fp. 8vo, 18*s*. in cloth; also in 6 vols. half morocco: re-issue, 1865. See list of contents in Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 317. The earlier vols. of Blackwood's Magazine are now very rare. Secure a copy of the whole, when to be had.

Christopher North as a Critic.

"Though the Edinburgh, the Quarterly, and the Westminster are the chief of our critical periodicals, we are by no means disposed to consider them as alone influencing our literature. In truth, some of the best disquisitions on poetry ever penned in the island belong not to them, but to Blackwood's Magazine, and are by a true poet, John Wilson. The imagination which Jeffrey wants, he has to overflowing; the mercury of his genius stands as high as that of any one. He has fancy for the highest and humour for the lowest; and in no flight or vagary can any genius indulge in which he cannot sympathize. Such a singular combination of qualities was perhaps never before known. He will dream with the proudest poet that ever sat on Parnassus, and then leave a heavenly superstructure, worthy of the imagination of Martin, to snickle hares and rabbits with some poacher at its base."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit., 1833.

"The whole literature of England does not contain a more brilliant series of articles than those with which he has enriched the pages of Blackwood's Magazine; and, which is rarer still, the generosity of feeling by which they are distinguished equals their critical acuteness and delicacy of taste. . . . If his criticisms have any imperfection, it is that they are too indulgent. He is justly alive to faults, and, when obliged to notice, signalizes them with critical justice; but the generosity of his nature leads him rather to seek for excellences, and, when he finds them, none bestows the meed of praise with more heartfelt fervour."—Sir Archibald Alison: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, ch. v. See, also, his Essays, 1850, ii. 421, n.

"His contributions to 'Blackwood's Magazine' raised the whole tone and character of periodical literature. The keenest wit, the most playful fancy, the most genial criticism, the deepest pathos, were lavished, year after year, with a profusion almost miraculous. . . . He, in his mature wisdom, is always generous."—Charles Knight: Half-Hours with the Best Authors, Nos. 95 and 364.

"His critical papers on Homer and Spenser have a magnificent breadth and eloquence, rarely, if ever before, found in disquisitions of that class, and his essays on our modern poets—on Thomson, Burns, Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Crabbe—exhibit profound sympathy with the creations and temperaments of genius and insight into the sources of emotion and passion. A 'frater feeling strong' impelled his teeming fancy and his fluent pen. . . . The collective works of Professor Wilson have not been generally popular. When seen in a mass, they had a character of sameness and repetition. Much of the original freshness was gone; both bloom and odour had perished in the using."—Robert Caruthers: Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi., 1860, 878.

"Now, in explaining to youth the doctrine [respecting the phenomenon of Causality] of Dr. Brown, I am happy to avail myself of the assistance of my late lamented friend, Dr. Brown's successor, [see Blackwood's Mag., xl. 122,] whose metaphysical acuteness was not the least remarkable of his many brilliant qualities."—Sir William Hamilton: Lects. on Metaphysics, 1859, Lect. XXXIX.

It will be remembered that Sir William was the unsuccessful candidate when Wilson was, in 1820, elected Dr. Brown's successor.

"A living writer of the most ardent and enthusiastic genius, whose eloquence is as the rush of mighty waters."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, vol. ii. Part 2, ch. v. sec. 82, (on Spenser's Faery Queen.)

"In Prof. Wilson's critical writings will be found rancour close beside cordiality, petty malignity vitiating acute discrimination, and vulgar superstitions spoiling that large and liberal faith which is of 'poetry, poetical,'—all, in short, that is comprehended in the words 'Tory mischief,' by which Mr. Lockhart, in Scott's Life, has called attention to the violence, exuberances, and injustices—'that were'—of a certain Northern Magazine." —Lon. Athen., 1854, 438.

A late eminent critic remarks of Blackwood's Magazine,

"We remember no work of which so much might be truly said both in censure and in eulogy,—no work at some times so profound and at others so trifling,—one moment so instinct with noble indignation, the next so pitifully falling into the errors it had denounced,—in one page breathing the deepest and the kindliest spirit of criticism, in another condescending to give currency to the lowest calumnies."—Sir T. N. Talfourd: New Month. Mag.; and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

Christopher North as a Poet.

"His poetical powers are very varied,—that is, he can handle any subject in its own peculiar spirit. His 'Edith and Nora' is one of those fairy fictions of which he once promised a volume; there is a wondrous beauty shed over the landscape on which he brings out his spiritual folk to sport and play and do good things to men; nor has he wasted all his sweetness on the notinsensible earth; he has endowed his fairies with charms from a hundred traditions, assigned them poetic and moral tasks, and poured inspiration into their speech. Another fine poem of his is 'An Address to a Wild Deer:' for bounding elasticity of language, hurrying thoughts, and crowding imagery, it is without a parallel. Indeed, throughout all his smaller poems there is a deep feeling for nature; an intimate knowledge of the workings of the heart; and a liquid fluency of language almost lyrical."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit., 1833.

"His poems are full of beauty: they have all the freshness of the heather; a true relish for nature breaks out in all of them; they are the earnest breathings of a happy and buoyant spirit; a giving out, as it were, of the breath that has been inhaled among the mountains."—Mrs. S. C. Hall.

"The grand characteristics of the poetry of Wilson are delicacy of sentiment and ethereal elegance of description. He refines and elevates whatever he touches, and if in his hands common things lose their vulgar attributes, they are exchanged by him for something better. . . . Wilson makes nearer approach, in tone of thought, to the Lake School than to any other great class of writers; nor do his ideas of the philosophical principles of composition seem widely different from theirs; but he never offends, like them, by endeavouring to extract sentiment from incongruous subjects. . . . The great defect in the earlier poetry of Professor Wilson will be found to result from 'the fatal facility' with which he found expression for his exuberant riches of thought and imagery."—D. M. Moir: Sketches of Poet. Lit., 3d ed., 1856, 133.

"As to his poetry, I cannot say that it has been underrated,—I only say that it has been eclipsed by his splendid prose. But in the Isle of Palms and The City of the Plague, to say nothing of his smaller poems, there is much which 'the world will not willingly let die.' Scott, Southey, and Wilson are men who, had they never written prose, would have stood higher among Poets than they do. . . . As for Professor Wilson, his poetry has been almost traditional, full of beauty though it be, since it became overshadowed by the multifarious brilliancy and fecundity of Kit North."—R. S. Mackenzie, D.C.L.: Life of Professor Wilson, in his ed. of the Noctes, ii., xxiv.

A bronze statue of Wilson, by John Steel, a Scottish sculptor, is soon (we write in 1865) to be erected in East Prince Street Garden, Edinburgh. It is ten feet in height, and is to rest on a granite pedestal.

"The careless ease of his dress has been adopted, with scarcely a touch of artistic license, in the statue: a plaid, which he was in the habit of wearing, supplies the needed folds of drapery, and the trunk of a palm-tree gives a rest to the figure, while it indicates, commemoratively, his principal poetical work, 'The Isle of Palms.' The lion-like head and face, full of mental and muscular power, thrown slightly upward and backward, express fervid and impulsive genius evolving itself in free and fruitful thought,—the glow of poetical inspiration animating every feature. The figure, tall, massive, and athletic; the hands, the right grasping a pen, at the same time clutching the plaid that hangs across the chest, the left resting negligently on the leaves of a half-opened manuscript; the limbs loosely planted yet firm and vigorous: all correspond with the grandly elevated expression of the countenance."—Mrs. Gordon.

The late Mr. Fillans executed a likeness of Mr. Wilson in marble. There is a portrait of him taken in 1819 in Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk; one in Duncan's Entry of Prince Charles Edward into Edinburgh, painted in 1843; one in Faed's Sir Walter Scott and his Literary Friends at Abbottsford; one by Sir John Watson Gordon, of Edinburgh; and a full-length life-size portrait by Raeburn,—presented in 1859 by John Wilson, the son of the original, to the Royal Scottish Academy.

"Cet ouvrage contient des particularités curieuses, mais pas toujours très-exactes, sur la campagne du général Bonaparte en Egypte."—BRUNET: Manuel, 5th ed., v. (1864) 1459.

Respecting the charge, first made in this work, that Bonaparte poisoned sick soldiers at Jaffa, see Las Casas's Life of Napoleon, i. 192, 193, 202; Preface to No. 3, infra; Edin. Rev., ii. 232, (by Rev. Sydney Smith,) xviii. 259; Lon. Quar. Rev., v. 67, and xix. 135. Read, also, in connection with Sir R. Wilson's Account, Æneas Anderson's Journal of the Expedition, Lon., 1802, 4to; some l. p. 3. Inquiry into the Present State of the Military Force of Britain, Lon., 1804, 8vo. 4. Brief Remarks on the Character and Composition of the Russian Army, and a Sketch of the Campaigns in Poland in the Years 1806 and 1807, 1810, 4to; some fine paper: also 1810, 8vo. This should be read in connection with the Travels of Dr. E. D. Clarke.

"After making allowance for much inaccuracy, and a good deal of useless disputation, . . . must be allowed to have made an important addition to our knowledge of that country."—Edin. Rev., xviii. 230.

"We think that Sir Robert Wilson has rendered an eminent service to his country, to Europe, and the world," &c.—Lon. Quar. Rev., v. 63.

"You remember, North, Sir Bob Wilson wrote a book on this subject many years ago, which sadly terrified several old women who are holders of India stock."—TICKLER: Noctes Ambros., Oct. 1828, Blackw. Mag., xxiv. 501. See, also, xlv. 93.

It was criticised with severity in Lon. Quar. Rev., xix. 131–177. Sir Robert responded in—6. Letter from Sir Robert Wilson to his Constituents in Refutation of a Charge for dispatching a False Report of a Victory to the Commander-in-Chief of the British Army in the Peninsula in the Year 1809; and which Charge is advanced in the Quarterly Review published in September, 1818, 1818, 8vo, pp. 32. Reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., xix. 478–92. Since his death have appeared the following: 7. Narrative of Events during the Invasion of Russia by Napoleon Bonaparte, and the Retreat of the French Army, 1812; by General Sir Robert Wilson; Edited by his Nephew and Son-in-Law, the Rev. Herbert Randolph, M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, Mar. 1860, 8vo; 2d ed., July, 1860, 8vo.

"Honestly and fearlessly described by an impartial and perfectly competent witness. . . . He does justice to both parties in this war of giants."—Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 438.

"May be advantageously read after the narrative of Labaume, Ségur, and others."—Lon. Lit. Churchman.

8. Private Diary of Travels, Personal Services, and Public Events, during Missions and Employment with the European Armies in the Campaigns of 1812, 1813, 1814: from the Invasion of Russia to the Capture of Paris; by General Sir Robert Wilson, C.M.T.; Edited by his Nephew and Son-in-Law, the Rev. Herbert Randolph, Jan. 1861, 2 vols. 8vo. Commended by Army and Nav. Gaz., Lon. Athen., and Lon. Spec., 1861. Also reviewed in Blackw. Mag., July, 1860, (and see same for March, 1861.) 9. Life of General Sir Robert Wilson; from Autobiographical Memoirs, Journals, Narratives, Correspondence, &c.; Edited by his Nephew and Son-in-Law, the Rev. Herbert Randolph, Jan. 1863, 2 vols. 8vo. Reviewed in Lon. Athen., 1863, i. 150, and Lon. Quar. Rev., No. 233, Jan. 1865. These volumes bring down the General's career to the Peace of Tilsit, July 8, 1807: we trust that the editor will continue the story. Among the materials for the history of the succeeding years is, A Narrative of the Campaigns of the Loyal Lusitanian Legion under Brigadier-General Sir Robert Wilson, by William Mayne, Lieut.-Col., 1812, 8vo. A biographical notice of General Wilson will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1849, ii. 91, (Obituary.) See, also, 1816, i. 625, (Letter on the Escape of Lavallette;) Blackw. Mag., viii. 330, 331, 568, xiv. 80, xvi. 78, xxi. 391, xxii. 409, xxviii. 469; Atlantic Monthly, April, 1865, 481, (by S. C. Hall.) It is often said that "Republics are ungrateful:" the disgraceful act of the royal libertine, ("the first gentleman of Europe,") by which Sir Robert Wilson was deprived of his hard-earned honours, strengthens the evidence afforded by the cases of Marlborough, Byng, Dundonald, and Wellington, that this reproach is not to be confined to "Republics."

Wilson, Sir Thomas, LL.D., one of the earliest English philologists, was educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, and afterwards became tutor to the two sons of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk; lived abroad during the reign of Mary, and was imprisoned by the Inquisitor at Rome on account of the heresy alleged to be contained in his treatises on Logic and Rhetoric; after torture, which failed to shake his constancy, he escaped in consequence of a fire which caused the populace to release the prisoners from their incarceration; on the accession of Elizabeth returned to England, and became a Master of Requests, Master of St. Katherine's Hospital near the Tower, and Private Secretary to the Queen; Envoy to the Low Countries, 1576; Secretary of State, 1577; Dean of Durham, 1579; d. 1581.

"This [1553, 4to] is the first edition of Wilson's 'Rhetoric,' but two years earlier the same distinguished scholar, who was at one time Secretary to Queen Elizabeth, had put forth his 'Arte of Logicke.' Both of them were works of considerable importance, but the 'Logic' is especially noticeable, because, as pointed out nearly forty years ago, (Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, ii. 445,) it enables us to ascertain that Nicholas Udall's 'Ralph Roister Doister' is the oldest original comedy in our language, taking precedence, by several years, of Bishop Still's Gammer Gurton's Needle. . . . Wilson's Rhetoric, though it contains no such novel and valuable fact, is a work of great literary interest, including nearly all the information that, at that early date, could be introduced in illustration of the subject."—J. "The Treatise of Wilson powerfully assisted the cause which Ascham had been advocating, [the cultivation of English prose by scholars;] it displays much sagacity and good sense, and greatly contributed to clear the language from the affectation consequent on the introduction of foreign words and idioms."—DR. "Warton says that it is the first system of criticism in our language. But in the common use of the word it is no criticism at all, any more than the treatise of Cicero de Oratore. . . . Wilson was a man of considerable learning, and his Art of Rhetorique is by no means without merit."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 209.

"Both King William and Q. Anne offered him better bishopricks in Ireland and in England, which he constantly declined. . . . His lordship's extraordinary merits justly gained him the esteem of several eminent personages in this nation; Queen Caroline, consort to King George II., had no small regard to him, and often mentioned him in that light. He was once going to pay his duty to her Majesty, who at that time had several of our prelates with her: as soon as the queen saw him entering the presence-chamber, she turned to the right reverends, and said, 'Here, my lords, comes a bishop whose errand is not to apply for a translation, nor would he part with his spouse [his diocese] because she is poor.' . . . To conclude, as no pen is perhaps equal to the task of characterizing this truly primitive Churchman, I shall only say with this writer [Dr. Cooper, of Chester] that he was in every particular what St. Paul tells us a Bishop ought to be: he was Vir sane cui vix ætas superior parem dederat, vel postera datura est, imo etiam et probus moribus et in humanum genus studio et amore insignibus adeo, ut apud omnes summum sui reliquerit desiderium. Thus, by living a godly, righteous, and sober life, this excellent divine attained to the ninety-third year of his age, and the fifty-eighth of his consecration, and gently expired in the beginning of March, 1755." —Life, in Biog. Brit., ut supra.

"During the fifty-eight years that he had the bishopric, he never failed, unless on occasion of sickness, to expound the Scriptures, to preach, or to administer the sacrament every Sunday at one or other of the churches in his diocese; and if absent from the island, he always preached at the church where he resided for the day." See Life prefixed to his Works, Crutwell's edition.

"His style and language is adapted to the understanding and capacity of all orders and degrees of men: at the same time, he delivered his sentiments with all the dignity and authority of an inspired apostle."—Rev. P. Moore: Sermon at his Funeral.

"The most perfect gospel preacher among uninspired men." —Rev. Richard Warner.

"To think on Bishop Wilson with veneration is only to agree with the whole Christian world. I hope to look into his books with other purposes than those of criticism, and after their perusal not only to write but to live better." —Dr. Samuel Johnson.

"Burning indeed and shining, like the Baptist, in an evil time, he seemeth as if a beacon lighted on his small Island, to show what his Lord and Saviour could do in spite of man."—Rev. J. H. Newman, D.D.

"This is a very good book, but spun out to too great a length. . . . We could not wish a more distinct or honest chronicler. . . . The style is plain and unaffected."—Edin. Rev., l. 397.

See, also, Westm. Rev., xiii. 19; DE FOE, DANIEL, p. 489, supra; and article on De Foe in Edin. Rev., lxxxii. 480.

An excellent article on De Foe's Works will be found in Bohn's Lowndes, ii., 1858, 612–622. Of a new issue of De Foe's Novels and Miscellaneous Works, Sir Walter Scott's edition, vols. i.–vi., p. 8vo, appeared in Bohn's British Classics, 1854–56. Add to these the edition of Robinson Crusoe pub. in Bohn's Illustrated Library, 1855, p. 8vo. The popularity of this charming tale continues so great that five editions were issued in 1864 in London alone, viz.: Routledge, one in February, 12mo, and one in April, p. 8vo; Beeton, one in June, 8vo; Cassell, one in September, with upwards of 100 illustrations, r. 8vo; Knight & Son, one in November, 8vo. Warne pub. two editions, 12mo, in 1865, and one edition, 12mo, in 1866; Gall, of Edinburgh, an illustrated edition, 12mo, in 1865; and Macmillan, Lon. and Camb., 12mo, in 1866.

In 1867 appeared editions: by Tegg, 12mo, (with Life by Stebbing,) Routledge, p. 8vo, Oliver & Boyd, 18mo; in 1868: by Macmillan, p. 8vo, Nimmo, 18mo, Warne, 18mo, Ward & Lock, 16mo; in 1869: Routledge, in French, 32mo; to June, 1870: Griffin, 32mo, Tegg, 12mo. Nimmo published a volume styled The Works of De Foe, 1869, r. 8vo, (Stand. Ser.) But the most important work on this author is entitled Daniel De Foe: his Life and Recently-Discovered Writings, Extending from 1716 to 1729; by William Lee, Hotten, 1869, 3 vols. 8vo.

"Important as this new Life of De Foe may be considered by many, we doubt not greater value will be attached to the second and third of Mr. Lee's volumes, in which he has reprinted more than three hundred and fifty essays and letters on subjects moral and religious, imaginative and humourous, amatory, ironical, and miscellaneous, unearthed by him from the journals, &c. in which he has traced the hand of the great master; while his rectification of the list of De Foe's writings contains no less than two hundred and fifty-four works, all of which, except twelve, (of whose genuineness Mr. Lee declares he has otherwise most satisfactory proof,) he has studiously read. The book is by far the most complete which has yet been given to the world on the subject of De Foe, and entitles the author to the thanks of all the admirers of the True-born Englishman."—Notes and Queries, April 24, 1869, 397.

"In the introduction he informs us that he has 'been enabled to add sixty-four distinct works to the catalogue of De Foe's productions.' . . . At least fifty more distinct works, hitherto unattributed to De Foe, but which may confidently be ascribed to him, remain for future incorporation with those included in Mr. Lee's list, when the stock account of the debt we owe to this most fertile of authors shall be finally adjusted."—JAS. CROSSLEY: Notes and Queries, May 1, 1869, 402. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1838, 370, by Mr. Crossley, (Due Preparation for the Plague, 1722, 12mo.)

"A monument to De Foe, the author of Robinson Crusoe, is to be erected in England by a subscription from boys and girls. The fund has already reached $250, from 1400 subscribers. This is within $50 of the total cost."—April 12, 1870.

Speech in the House of Commons, May 26, 1809, Lon., 1810, 8vo, pp. 43. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., Feb. 1811, (xvii.) 253–290. Parts of this article were repub. in Lord Jeffrey's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 764–76, and parts (in some cases the same language) in Lord Brougham's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, ii. 347–83. There is some gross carelessness here,—who is to blame we know not. 3. Speeches in Parliament; to which is Prefixed Some Account of his Life, by Thomas Amyot, Esq., 1812, 3 vols. 8vo, with portrait. Mr. Amyot was for some years his private secretary, and a Life of Windham was expected from him. He died in 1850. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1851, i. 3.

"We could offer no better model; and we sincerely think that, at the present day particularly, the study of such a model would be eminently useful as a direction to public taste, and a corrective of the exaggerated language we have had occasion freely to censure."—*Amer. We must quote some opinions on Windham:

"Mr. Windham has been here to see me. . . . Such conversation I shall not have again till I come back to the regions of literature; and there Windham is inter stellas Luna minores."—Dr. Johnson to Dr. Brocklesby, Ashbourne, Sept. 2, 1784: Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 784. See 837 for Windham's memoranda of the conversation during this visit, and Index.

"He was a man of great, original, and commanding genius,—with a mind cultivated with the richest stores of intellectual wealth, and a fancy winged to the highest flights of a most captivating imagery; of sound and spotless integrity, with a warm spirit, but a generous heart; and of courage and determination so characteristic as to hold him forward as the strong example of what the old English heart could effect or endure."—EARL GREY: Speech on the Catholic Question.

"The finest gentleman of the age."—LORD MACAULAY: Warren Hastings. See, also, his Life of William Pitt.

"The most high-minded and incorruptible of living men."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 764.

"Windham's mind was in the last degree copious; the soil was so fertile, scratch where you pleased, up came white clover. He had many of the true characteristics of a hero, but he had one great fault as a statesman—he hated the popular side of any question."—WILLIAM WILBERFORCE: Life.

"He was an indiscreet debater, who sacrificed his interest as a statesman to his momentary feelings as an orator. For the sake of a new subtlety, or a forcible phrase, he was content to utter what loaded him with permanent unpopularity: his logical propensity led him always to extreme consequences."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Memoirs, ii. ch. i. See, also, i. ch. iii., vi.

"He was too often the dupe of his own ingenuity; which made him doubt and balance, and gave an oscitancy fatal to vigour in council, as well as most prejudicial to the effects of eloquence, by breaking the force of his blows as they fell."—LORD BROUGHAM: *States. of the Time of Geo. Wingfield, Edwin Maria, a merchant of London, a member of a distinguished family, was first President of the Colony of Virginia under the patent granted to Bartholomew Gosnold and others, April 10, 1606. In consequence of disagreements, he returned to England in 1608. Captain John Smith gives him a very bad character; but, by the care of a diligent antiquary, his own story has recently been given to the world: "A Discourse of Virginia," by Edwin Maria Wingfield, the First President of the Colony: now first printed from the Original Manuscript in the Lambeth Library; Edited, with Notes and an Introduction, by Charles Deane, &c., (from American Antiquarian Society's Transactions, vol. iv.,) Bost., Privately Printed, 1860, r. 8vo, pp. 45: 100 copies: Fowle, Dec. 1864, 789, $45. A few copies, dated 1859, 8vo, pp. 44, in consequence of typographical errors, were called in and cancelled. Favourably noticed in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1861, 561. See Smith, Captain John, No. 5; Hist. About 1847 Dr. Winslow established Sussex House, Hammersmith, a private asylum for the insane; and to this institution he long devoted himself, in the capacity of resident superintendent. See Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1857, art. iii.: Lunatic Asylums. In 1848 he founded (being both proprietor and editor) The Quarterly Journal of Psychological Medicine and Mental Pathology, which enjoys a high reputation and large circulation; and in January, 1861, he commenced the editorship of The Medical Critic. He has contributed to The London Times, The Gazette of Practical Medicine, Lancet, and other medical periodicals. In 1853 he was elected President of the London Medical Society; and he has also been President of the Association of the Medical Officers of Hospitals and Asylums for the Insane. See Photog. "We regard this work as a noble contribution to Oriental literature, a boon to all students and labourers in the Tamil field, and a crown of honour to its author."—Arcot Mission of the Reformed Dutch Church.

To the preparation of this great work Dr. Winslow devoted, as a rule, three to four hours a day for nearly thirty years. It contains over 67,000 Tamil words: 30,551 more words than any previous dictionary of the language. The cost of publication was from $15,000 to $20,000. Commendatory notices of it appeared in the Madras Observer, Madras Times, Colombo Observer, Athenæum, Statesman, and N. York Observer, and Appleton's Amer. Cyc., 1864, 814. Dr. Winslow also translated the Bible into the Tamil language, (Madras, completed about 1855;) published several works in India, and contributed on missionary and other topics to European and American periodicals. On the subject of missions to Ceylon, see Memoir of Rev. John Scudder, M.D., by Rev. J. B. Waterbury, D.D., N. York, 1870, 12mo.

Winthrop, John, Governor of Massachusetts, was b. at Groton, Suffolk, Jan. 12, 1587, O.S., and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; elected Governor of the Massachusetts Company, Oct. 20, 1629, and arrived at Salem, June 12, 1630, and from that date until his death, March 26, 1649, laboured zealously and efficiently for the interests of the colony. "For years, Winthrop, the leader of the first great enterprise, was the chief magistrate of the infant metropolis. His prudence guided its councils. His valor directed its strength. His life and fortunes were spent in fixing its character or improving its destinies. A bolder spirit never dwelt, a truer heart never beat, in any bosom. Had Boston, like Rome, a consecrated calendar, there is no name better entitled than that of Winthrop to be registered as its 'patron saint.'"—President Josiah Quincy: Address, Close 2d Cent. Settlement of Boston, 1830, 8vo.

Winthrop, John, eldest son of the preceding, b. at Groton, England, Feb. 12, 1605, O.S.; educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and admitted to the Inner Temple, London, 1624; arrived at Boston, Oct. 1635; founded the colony of Saybrook, Connecticut, in the next month; and obtained from Charles II., in 1662, a charter for

Connecticut, (see WOLCOTT, ROGER;) was elected Governor of Connecticut, 1657, and annually from 1659 until his death, in Boston, Mass., April 5, 1676. He was a member of the Royal Society, and a contributor to Phil. Trans. See Belknap's Amer. Biog.; Mass. Hist. Soc. Coll., 1st Ser., vol. iv., and 3d Ser., vols. iii., ix., x.; R. C. Greatly to his honour, considering the temper of the times and the religious fervour of the man, is the declaration of the historian of a persecuted sect, "Governor Winthrop earnestly dissuaded the shedding of blood." (Sewel's Hist. of the Quakers, vol. i.)

Winthrop, John, LL.D., b. in Boston, Mass., Dec. 1714, "of a family illustrated, in every period of colonial history, by names distinguished for patriotism and a love of literature; being lineally descended, in the fourth generation, from John Winthrop, the first Governor of Massachusetts," (Quincy's Hist. of Harv. Univ., ii. 217,) graduated at Harvard College, 1732, and from 1738 until his death, May 3, 1779, was Hollis Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in the same institution. He declined the presidency in 1769, and again in 1774.

Winthrop, John Still. Medical paper in Phil. Trans., 1745.

Winthrop, Robert Charles, LL.D., a descendant in the sixth generation of John Winthrop, (1587–1649,) Governor of Massachusetts, a grandson of Sir John Temple, and great-grandson of Governor James Bowdoin, was b. in Boston, May 12, 1809; graduated at Harvard College, 1828; studied law with Daniel Webster, 1828–31; a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts, 1834–40, and Speaker of the House, 1838–40; M.C., 1840–50, and Speaker of the House for the sessions 1848–49; U. S. Senator, 1850–51. In 1851 he received 65,000 votes for the office of Governor of Massachusetts, his two competitors polling about 40,000 and 30,000 respectively, but, an absolute majority being required, he was defeated in the Legislature. "Mr. Winthrop," remarked George Ticknor Curtis, in 1846, "has been from his earliest youth an object of public regard, as a person of high qualifications for public service." He is President of the Historical Society of Massachusetts and one of the most useful of its many zealous members. Among his many published addresses, orations, and lectures (see a long list in Cat. of the Lib. of the Mass. Hist. Soc., 1860, ii. 623–25) are the following: 1. Address before the New England Society in the City of New York, Bost., 1840, 8vo. Commended in N. Amer. Rev., l. 535. 2. Oration, 4th July, 1848, on the Occasion of Laying the Corner-Stone of the National Washington Monument, Wash., 1848, 8vo; Bost., 1853, 8vo. 3. Address before the Maine Historical Society, 1849, 8vo. See Lieber on Civil Liberty, ed. Phila., 1859, 134, n., 137, n. 4. Archimedes and Franklin: a Lecture delivered before the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association, Nov. 23, 1853, Bost., 1854, 8vo; 2d ed., 1854, 8vo. The statue of Franklin in Boston owes its existence to this lecture. Read in connection with it—5. Oration at the Inauguration of the Statue of Benjamin Franklin in his Native City, Sept. 17, 1856, 1856, 8vo. Also published in Memorial of the Inauguration of the Statue of Franklin, 1857, 8vo, 219–272. 6. Algernon Sidney; a Lecture, 1854, 8vo.

See, also, addresses of Mr. Winthrop, in a Memorial of Edward Everett from the City of Boston, 1865, 8vo, some l. p., r. 8vo, pp. 45, 127.

A volume of Mr. Winthrop's Addresses and Speeches on Various Occasions was published in 1853, Little, Brown & Co., r. 8vo, pp. xii., 773.

"The contents of this volume are varied and miscellaneous, covering a wide range of subjects, and manifesting upon all of them the large information and pure taste of the well-trained scholar, as well as the fluent manner and ready logic of the practised debater. . . . The volume is an honourable record of its author's long term of public service, an explicit avowal of his political opinions and preferences, and a fair and creditable specimen of the ability with which he has maintained them."—N. Amer. Rev., lxxv. 339, 357.

"A part les postes politiques qu'il a remplis et où il s'est montré un des chefs éminents du parti Whig, M. Winthrop a pris un rang distingué dans la littérature par ses Discours et ses Adresses, qui se distinguent à la fois par la méthode et le trait, malgré un certain excès d'ampleur."—G. VAPEREAU: Dict. univ. des Contemp., Paris, 1858, 1782.

"In his occasional addresses he displays not only that fulness of knowledge and learning belonging to his immediate theme which places him on the platform with the best-instructed orators of the day, but all those nameless graces of speech, that versatility and playfulness of fancy, that prompt and felicitous appropriation of any casual topic or incident of the moment, that current and catching sympathy with his audience,—so that he seems rather to be speaking with them and for them instead of to them,—which are the characteristics of the higher order of speech in England, but which are so rare in this country that I can hardly recall the name of any living orator who can hold a comparison with him."—Hugh Blair Grigsby, LL.D., to S. Austin Allibone, May 11, 1866.

This volume was followed by Addresses and Speeches, from 1852 to 1867, 1867, r. 8vo, pp. xiii., 725. Commended by London Saturday Review, which thinks that the tone and character of the style are rather English than American.

Mr. Winthrop has also added to our historical literature: 14. Life and Letters of John Winthrop, Governor of the Massachusetts Bay Company at their Emigration to New England, 1630, 8vo, 1864, 8vo, pp. xii., 452.

"He has connected the letters and other documents with which his volume is abundantly enriched by a very clear and admirably written narrative, and has further illustrated them by short explanatory notes, wherever such elucidation is required. We have also the promise of another volume of the 'Life and Letters,' which will include considerable new material, and bring the narrative down to his death,—a period of nearly twenty years."—N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1864, 129, 152.

"A volume which, while it perfectly accomplishes its author's personal end, is a valuable addition to historic literature."—Lon. Athen., 1864.

Winthrop, Theodore, a descendant of John Winthrop, Governor of Massachusetts, and Jonathan Edwards, President of the College of New Jersey, and numbering amongst his other ancestors seven Presidents of Yale College, was b. at New Haven, Conn., Sept. 22, 1828; graduated with high honours at Yale College, 1848; travelled in Europe, 1849–51, and subsequently resided for two years in Panama and made extensive explorations in Southern and Central America; admitted to the New York Bar, 1855; joined the Seventh New York Regiment in April, 1861, and soon afterwards became a Major in the U.S. Army, and connected himself as Military Secretary with General Butler's staff at Fortress Monroe; killed in an attack on Great Bethel, Virginia, June 10, 1861. Several spirited sketches from his pen,—Our March to Washington, Washington as a Camp, and Saccharrissa Mellassys,—published in the Atlantic Monthly Magazine, June to September, 1861, had attracted great attention, and prepared the way for a series of volumes left by him in manuscript, which were issued in the following order: 1. "The above works are all posthumous, but all display a wonderful power of imagination, reminding the reader often of some of Poe's finest productions, but manifesting, we think, far more intellectual power than he possessed."—Trübner's Amer. and Orient. Record, May 16, 1865, 54.

"The polish which culture gives to the mind, combined with native force of character and large experience of men and countries, are all manifested in Theodore Winthrop. He is, in our opinion, one of the most original of American writers, without being either vulgar or offensive to men of education. . . . He gives us the impression of always relating what he had witnessed. His heroes and heroines act as human beings, who have recently passed through the adventures in which they are made to figure. This impression of reality is produced without any straining after effect. He had experienced what life really is before attempting to depict it in a novel."—Westm. Rev., July, 1865, art. vi.

Wirt, William, LL.D., the son of a Swiss and German, b. at Bladensburg, Maryland, Nov. 8, 1772, lost both of his parents before he was eight years of age, and from his ninth to his thirteenth year pursued his studies at the grammar-school (residing also in the family) of the Rev. James Hunt, of Montgomery county; and subsequently lived for twenty months with Mr. Benjamin Edwards, of Maryland, as tutor to his sons; admitted to the Bar, 1792, and commenced practice in Culpepper and Albemarle counties, Virginia; married Mildred, eldest daughter of Dr. George Gilmer, of Pen Park, near Charlottesville, 1799, and took up his residence with the family; lost his wife in 1799, and removed to Richmond, where, in 1800, he was elected Clerk to the House of Delegates, and served three terms; Chancellor to the Eastern District of Virginia, 1802, and removed to Williamsburgh, but in a few months resigned the office and returned to Richmond, where, in the same year, (1802,) he married Miss E. W. Gamble, (see WIRT, MRS. ELIZABETH WASHINGTON,) and in the next spring commenced practice at Norfolk, where he resided until 1806, when he returned to Richmond; in the winter of 1807 retained, under the direction of President Jefferson, as assistant counsel to the Attorney-General of the United States in the prosecution of Aaron Burr for high treason, and gained great distinction by his forensic ability and impassioned eloquence; a member of the Virginia House of Delegates for the city of Richmond, 1808; United States Attorney for the District of Virginia, 1816; Attorney-General of the United States from 1817 until 1828, when he returned to Baltimore, and was actively engaged in practice until his death, at Washington, when in attendance on the Supreme Court, February 18, 1834. In 1831 he was the Anti-Masonic candidate for the office of President of the United States, (see No. 10, infra,) and received the vote of one State,—Vermont.

1. The Letters of the British Spy; Originally published in The Virginia Argus in August and September, 1803, Richmond, 1803, 8vo; 2d ed., Dec. 1803, 8vo, pp. 88; 3d ed., 1805, 18mo; 4th ed., Balt., 1811, 18mo; Lon., 1812, 12mo; 5th ed., Balt., 1813, 16mo; 10th ed., with a Biographical Sketch of the Author, by P. H. Cruse, N. York, 1832, 12mo; 1836, 12mo; 1848, 12mo. See HALL, JOHN E. These ten letters purport to be addressed by an English traveller to a British M.P. The personal notices which they contain will probably keep them alive, even if their literary merits—which have been highly estimated—fail to preserve them.

"Written with a clearness, spirit, and facility which, independently of extraneous evidence, would lead to the conclusion that he was calculated to excel in oratory. The fact, however, is satisfactorily established by his reported speeches," &c.—A. HAYWARD, Q.C.: Lon. Quar. Rev., lxvii. 29: American Orators and Statesmen.

"The style possesses a liveliness and a force which fix the attention; though the first occasionally degenerates into flippancy and the last swells into bombast. . . . We must assure our readers that every Letter contains something worth their perusal."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1813, ii. 109.

"His biographer says that he [Henry] read Plutarch every year. I doubt whether he ever read a volume of it in his life. . . . His biographer [Wirt] sent the sheets of his book to me as they were printed, and at the end asked for my opinion. I told him it would be a question hereafter whether his work should be placed on the shelf of history or of panegyric. It is a poor book, written in bad taste, and gives so imperfect an idea of Patrick Henry that it seems intended to show off the writer more than the subject of the work."—THOMAS JEFFERSON: from Daniel Webster's notes of his conversatim with Jefferson, Dec. 1824: Webster's Private Corresp., 1857, i. 367, 368.

"No member of Mr. Jefferson's family ever heard him mention Wirt's Life of Henry in the tone attributed to him by Mr. Webster."—DR. RANDALL: Life of Jefferson, 1858, iii. 508. See, also, 507, and i. 40.

"We were exceedingly disappointed on perusing this last specimen of his literary labours. . . . He is everywhere but in the plain trodden paths of nature. We were not a little surprised to find so many errours of language in a writer usually so correct."—JARED SPARKS: N. Amer. Rev., vi. (Mar. 1818) 323.

"We have remarked of Wirt that his life is peculiarly fraught with materials for the edification of youth. His career is full of wholesome teaching to the young votary who strives for the renown of an honourable ambition. Its difficulties and impediments, its temptations and trials, its triumphs over many obstacles, its rewards, both in the self-approving judgment of his own heart and in the success won by patient labour and well-directed study, and the final consummation of his hopes, in an old age not less adorned by the applause of good men than by the serene and cheerful temper inspired by a devout Christian faith,—all these present a type of human progress worthy of the imitation of the young and gifted, in which they may find the most powerful incentives towards the accomplishment of the noblest ends of a generous love of fame."—J. We regret that, to our knowledge, there exists no collection of his numerous writings."—REV. TIMOTHY FLINT: Lon. Athen., 1835, 803: Sketches of the Lit. of the United States.

"Of his literary merits I do not think highly. His abilities were more brilliant than solid. He had a rapid but not skilful command of language, a prolific but not a chaste or correct fancy, and his opinions were generally neither new nor striking."—R. W. In French, Paris, 1865. Dr. Wiseman's Recollections embraced the latter part of the pontificate of Pius VII., the whole of the pontificates of Leo XII. and Pius VIII., and the early years of Gregory XVI. With each of these dignitaries he was a favourite.

"A picturesque book on Rome and its ecclesiastical sovereigns, by an eloquent Roman Catholic. . . . Cardinal Wiseman has here treated a special subject with so much generality and geniality that his Recollections will excite no ill feeling in those who are most conscientiously opposed to every idea of human infallibility represented in Papal domination."—Lon. Athen., 1858, i. 361. See, also, 395, 468, 532.

"He relates his experiences of Rome and her rulers in a pleasant, genial style."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1858.

"To our clergy, colleges, convents, and flocks, these simple words of the great pastor we have lost will come with singular persuasiveness and power."—HENRY EDWARD MANNING, D.D.

It will be observed that his talents as an oral teacher on miscellaneous subjects were frequently invoked:

"The memory of Cardinal Wiseman will always be endeared to those who have heard him lecture, however they might differ from him in matters of faith, as one of the most pleasing and lucid of lecturers upon a wide range of subjects connected with education, history, art, and science, the announcement of any of which was always sure to draw eager and attentive audiences."—Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 194: obituary notice.

A collection of his Lectures on Art, Literature, and Social Science was announced in 1859 by Hurst & Blackett: it has not yet appeared, (July, 1870.) A biography of His Eminence, by John Francis Maguire, M.P., author of the Life of Father Mathew, has been anticipated; but as the Rev. Dr. Manning, the prelate's successor, is collecting the proper materials, I presume that it is to him we are to look for what can hardly fail to be an interesting—I trust that it will also be a judiciously compiled—Memoir of a man of mark, whose interest in and cordial encouragement of this work I shall ever gratefully remember.

His demise was thus announced to the Roman Catholic clergy:

"Pietati et clementiæ Divinæ commenda, sanctisque sacrificiis adjuva animam carissimi in Christo Patris nostri, Eminentissimi et Reverendissimi Domini Nicolai, Tit. S. Pudentianæ S.R.E. Presb. Card. Archiepiscopi Westmonasteriensis, qui placidissimè obdormivit in Domino jamdiu suspirato, die xv. Feb. MDCCCLXV. Vale magne Præsul, in vitâ nobilis, nobilissime in Morte; apud Dominum memento nostri, et ecclesiæ viduatæ sponsæ tuæ."

The London correspondent of the Dublin Freeman's Journal says,

"Measures are in a forward state for a beginning with the Catholic Cathedral to be erected in London as a memorial of the late Cardinal Wiseman. A piece of ground of nearly three acres in extent has been secured in Westminster, near Buckingham Palace and the splendid range of buildings now in course of erection on the Belgravian estate of the Marquis of Westminster."—Sept. 1868.

He was the seventh English Cardinal since the Reformation, (his predecessors were Pole, Allen, Howard, York, Weld, and Acton,) and, by his learning, piety, executive ability, and tact, wielded an influence in favour of the English branch of his Church which neither priest nor laic since the days of Pole and More has even approached.

He left a second part, also in Latin, bringing the history down to Montrose's death: this was never pub. in its original form. In 1652, 8vo, a coarse translation of the first part, under the title of Montrose Redivivus, &c., was pub. in London: and this was repub., together with a translation of the second part, and an Appendix, all in 1 vol. 8vo, in 1720. A superior translation of the whole, "with a strong Jacobite preface," was pub. at Edinburgh in 1756, and again in 1819, 8vo.

We are glad to find in the last number of The Bookseller (London, July 1, 1870, p. 570) the following notice of her brother's forthcoming edition of Shakspeare, announced by us under STEEVENS, GEORGE, (supra.)

"SHAKSPEAREANA. A new Variorum edition is announced by an American gentleman, Mr. H. H. Furness. In this the English 'Variorum' of 1821 and the 'Cambridge Shakspeare' are to be combined, and all the best emendations and notes of all the ablest critics given in a clear and useful form. It will be published by Messrs. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, who have issued a prospectus and specimen. The 'Furness Variorum Shakspeare' will, if the promises held out by the prospectus be fulfilled, become a cyclopædia of all known texts, emendations, and notes, and Shakspeare students will be able to see at a glance the literary history of every word and phrase during the last two hundred years."

Wither, Wyther, or Withers, George, perhaps one of the best of the old English poets exhumed by modern literary antiquaries, was b. at Brentworth, Hampshire, June 11, 1588; educated at Magdalene College, Oxford, and subsequently entered himself first at one of the inns of Chancery, and afterwards at Lincoln's Inn; was imprisoned for his satire (published in 1614) entitled Abuses Stript and Whipt, and procured his release by his Satyre to the King, which appeared the same year; in 1639 served as Captain of Horse in the expedition of Charles I. against the Scotch Covenanters; in 1642 sold his estate and raised a troop of horse for the Parliament, in whose army he was promoted to the rank of Major; was taken prisoner by the royalists, and owed his life to the intercession of Sir John Denham, who pleaded that "so long as Wither lived, he [Denham] would not be accounted the worst poet in England;" constituted by the Parliament a Justice of the Peace for Hampshire, Surrey, and Essex, which office he kept for six years, and was afterwards made by Cromwell Major-General of all the horse and foot in the county of Surrey, (which enabled him to accumulate great spoil,) and in 1655 or 1656 was made Master of the Statute Office; after the Restoration, was obliged to disgorge his spoil, and was also imprisoned as the alleged author of Vox Vulgi, which was voted a scandalous and seditious libel; obtained his liberty some years before his death, which occurred near the Savoy Church, May 2, 1667.

He was a voluminous writer: Thomas Park, in the British Bibliographer, vol. i. 179–205, 305–332, 417–440, and vol. ii. 17–32, 378–391, enumerates 112 articles, (some few of which, however, are not known to have been printed,) some in verse, some in prose, some mixed; another long catalogue will be found in Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 763–774; and other lists will be referred to below. Perhaps the catalogue most easily accessible to the majority of readers is the excellent one in Bohn's Lowndes, Part 10, (1864,) 2963–2972, to which we acknowledge our obligations. The emblematic prints were engraved by Crispin Pass.

"The prints are, in general, designed with great spirit, and executed with neatness; some of them are exceedingly pretty. . . . The general character of Wither's Emblems is that of sound morality, enforced in a sensible style, tinctured with warm religious feelings, and some of them adorned with a few fresh and fragrant flowers of poetry."—Retrospec. Rev., ix. 131.

Charles Lamb considered the Emblemes one of the most curious and interesting books in the language.

97. Select Lyrical Ballads, written about 1662, Kent, 1815, 8vo, 12 leaves. 100 copies on coloured paper, at the private press of Lee Priory. Poems, reprinted from the Rare Original Editions; Edited by J. M. Gutch, Esq., Bristol, (1820,) p. 8vo, 3 vols., portrait by Holle. Sotheby's, Aug. 1860, £1 17*s*. This series was never completed. It contains: vol. i., Abuses Stript and Whipt; vol. ii., Selections from Henry's Obsequies; A Satire Written to the King; Epithalamia; Shepherd's Hunting; His Motto, [with notes;] Hymns and Songs, in 2 parts; Fair Virtue, the Mistress of Philarete; Selections from Abuses Stript and Whipt, with an addition of notes. A few copies are divided into 4 vols., with new title-pages, printed by Mr. Pulham, having the date 1839. Willis & Sotheran advertise in their Catalogue for 1859, No. 9439, Wither's Motto, Select Emblems, Hallelujah, &c., edited with Notes by J. M. Gutch, 1621–41, all in 1 vol., s. a., p. 8vo, 5*s*. Mr. Gutch's own account of his selections from Wither's writings, and of his Life of Wither, (of which one copy only was made up from all the printed sheets,) will be found in Lon. Athen., 1858, i. 500.

Wither also contributed to Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, 1613, 1616; Drayton's Polyolbion, 1622, Part 2; Smith's Virginia, 1626; Hayman's Quodlibets, 1629; Wastel's Microbiblion, 1629; Blaxton's English Usurer, 1634; Carter's Expedition into Kent and Sussex, 1650. The head prefixed to Thomas Jenner's 31st Emblem in his Soules Solace, 1631, 4to, (Bright, £4 4*s*.,) is supposed to be intended for Wither. An original portrait of Wither, painted in oil by Cornelius Jansen, (probably the picture from which was engraved the likeness prefixed to his Emblemes,) was sold at Gutch's sale, 2710, for £13.

"George Wither, a most profuse pourer forth of English rhime, not without great pretence to a poetical zeal against the vices of his times, in his Motto, his Remembrancer, and other such like satirical works. . . . But the most of poetical fancy which I remember to have found in any of his writings is a little piece of pastoral poetry called The Shepherd's Hunting."—Edward Phillips: Theat. Poet. Anglic., 1675.

"Honest George Withers, though a rustic poet, hath been very acceptable; as to some prophecies, so to others, for his plain country honesty. . . . Quarles yet outwent him: mixing competent wit with piety; especially in his poem against 'Rest on Earth.' Silvester, or Dubartas, seems to me to outdo them both."—Richard Baxter: Pref. Address to his Poet. Fragmenta, 1681.

"The works of Wither are what we called at Eton a good sharping book; and poets by profession will find many sentiments and many lines ready-made upon almost any subject, political, moral, or religious."—Lord Hailes.

"I shall conclude all I have to say of this everlasting rhymer with two lines of Dryden, which comprehend his whole character as a poet:

"'He fagotted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well.'"

Granger: Biog. Hist. of Eng., 5th ed., iv. 41.

"As long as simplicity is a primary quality of genius; as long as natural sentiments shall be of more general and more permanent attraction than the perverted operations of whimsical learning or whimsical manners; as long as the inexhaustible verdure and variety of fields and forests is more delightful than the formal ingenuity of a Dutch garden,—so long will the easy and unstudied charms of Wither's muse prevail over the laborious trifilings of Donne, and Crashaw, and Herbert."—Sir S. E. Brydges: Restituta, i. 491.

"Of such verses as Wither's, who has been of late extolled too highly, the chief merit is their sense and truth; which, if he were not tedious, might be an excellence in prose. Antiquaries, when they find a poet adapted for their purposes, conjecture that he is an excellent one. This prosing satirist, strange to say, in some pastoral poetry has opened the right vein."—Isaac D'Israeli: Quarrels of Authors, in Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1840, 251, n.

"Dismissing with contempt the puerilities and conceits which deformed the pages of so many of his contemporaries, he cultivated, with almost uniform assiduity, a simplicity of style and an expression of natural sentiment and feeling, which have occasioned the revival of his choicest compositions in the nineteenth century, and will forever stamp them with a permanent value."—Dr. Drake: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 668.

Ellis, in his Specimens of the Early English Poets, called the attention of his contemporaries to "that playful fancy, pure taste, and artless delicacy of sentiment which distinguish the poetry of his early youth."

"His best poems were published in 1622, with the title of 'Mistress of Philarete.' Some of them are highly beautiful, and bespeak a mind above the grovelling puritanism into which he afterwards fell. I think there is hardly anything in our lyric poetry of this period equal to Wither's lines on his Muse, published by Ellis."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 43.

"Wither has, within the last few years, received ample justice for the neglect and contempt with which his contemporaries treated him as a poet; nor have his merits been over-rated, for I know of no writer from whose works more exquisite passages can be culled, than from his."—Dr. Bliss: Athen. Oxon., iii. 775.

"The praises of poetry have been often sung in ancient and modern times; strange powers have been ascribed to it of influence over animate and inanimate auditors; its force over fascinated crowds has been acknowledged; but before Wither, no one had celebrated its power at home, the wealth and the strength which this divine gift confers upon its possessor."—Charles Lamb.

"I perfectly agree with your opinion of old Wither: Quarles is a wittier writer, but Wither lays most hold of the heart. Quarles thinks of his audience when he lectures; Wither soliloquises in company from a full heart."—Charles Lamb to Robert Southey, Nov. 8, 1798.

We have now to direct the reader to the list of Wither's works in W. Carew Hazlitt's Hand-Book to the Popular Poet. and Dramat. Lit. of G. Brit., &c., 1867, 664–73, and to J. P. Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1866, vol. ii.

Witherspoon, Alexander, M.D., d. at Washington, D.C., 1854, aged 37, was a contributor to medical journals.

Witherspoon, John, D.D., LL.D., a lineal descendant of John Knox, b. at Yester, Scotland, Feb. 5, 1722, and educated at the University of Edinburgh, was minister at Beith, 1745–57, and at Paisley, 1757–68, and President of the College of New Jersey from Aug. 17, 1768, until his death, Nov. 15, 1794. He was a member of the Provincial Congress of New Jersey in May, 1776, and represented New Jersey in the General Congress during the sessions of 1776, '77, '78, '79, '81, and '82, and took an active and most useful part in the deliberations of that august assembly. 1. Ecclesiastical Characteristics: or, The Arcana of Church Policy; being an Humble Attempt to Open Up the Mystery of Moderation, Glasgow, 1753, 8vo; 3d ed., 1754, 8vo; at least five edits. Anon.

"Written with a good deal of pleasantry and humour. What the author aims at is to expose the principles and conduct of a set of men in the Church of Scotland who call themselves the moderate party."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1754, ii. 288.

"His descriptions relate to the state of the Scotch church in the middle of the eighteenth century; and from this account it appears to have been as low as the English church at that time."—Bickersteth's C. S., 4th ed., 309.

Warburton thought highly of this book. Witherspoon had to confront the literary leaders in the Assembly, Blair, Gerard, Campbell, and Robertson, who were esteemed the chiefs of the Moderate party. Witherspoon followed it up with—2. A Serious Apology for the Characteristics,—in which he acknowledged his authorship of No. 1. 3. Essay on the Connection between the Doctrine of Justification by the Imputed Righteousness of Christ and Holiness of Life, &c., Edin., 1756, 12mo. Often repub. Considerations on the Nature and Extent of the Legislative Authority of the British Parliament, Phila., 1774, 8vo; Lon., ? 1775, 8vo. Ascribed by Dean Josiah Tucker, D.D., in his Tract No. V., 1775, 8vo, to Dr. B. Franklin. See Lon. Mon. Rev., 1775, i. 175. He also published a number of single Sermons, Lectures on Moral Philosophy, on Eloquence, on Divinity, and on Education, Letters on Marriage, an excellent Essay on Money, philological papers, (see The Druid,) &c., and wrote some of the American State Documents. Some of his political pieces and speeches in Congress were included in his Works. After his death appeared—all in one volume—Sermons on Various Subjects, a Supplementary Volume, with the History of a Corporation of Servants, and other Tracts, Edin., 1798, 12mo; 1799, 12mo. A collective edition of his works, with an Account of the Author's Life, with Sermon by John Rodgers, D.D., (also pub. separately, N. York, 1795, 8vo, and in Prot. Dissent. Mag., vol. ii.,) was pub. at N. York, 1800–1801, 4 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1802, 4 vols. 8vo, (the memoir was supplied by Samuel Stanhope Smith, D.D.;) another ed., with his Life, appeared at Edin., 1804, 9 vols. 12mo; again, 1815, 9 vols. 12mo; his Miscellaneous Works were pub. at Phila., 1803, 8vo; his Select Works, with Life, Lon., 1804, 2 vols. 8vo; his Lectures on Moral Philosophy, 3d ed., Phila., 1810, 12mo; his Essays, Lectures, &c., Edin., 1822, 4 vols. 12mo, and Sermons on Public Occasions, 2 vols. 12mo. The name of Dr. Witherspoon stands high on both Continents: in America, where he laboured so zealously and efficiently in the causes of education and freedom, it should be held in great veneration. See Chambers's and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Em. Scots., ed. 1855, iv. 487; Sprague's Annals, iii., Presbyterian, 288–300, and portrait; Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, i. 226, 270; Bartlett's Americanisms, ed. 1859, xxix., xxxi.; Amer. Quar. Reg., ix. 105, (with portrait;) Edin. Chris. Instruc., Oct. 1829: Blackw. Mag., ii. 433; Dr. Alex. Carlyle's Autobiog., 1861; J. T. Headley's Chaplains and Clergy of the Revolution, N. York, 1864, 12mo.

Dr. E. Williams considers that Witherspoon has many general excellencies united, without any overpowering features. He remarks (C. P., 5th ed., 321) that his Works are "sound, sensible, perspicuous, argumentative, and often eloquent." Bickersteth (C. S., 4th ed., 446) calls his Works "eloquent, perspicuous, evangelical, and practical." The Rev. John Newton, Wm. Wilberforce, and others were also admirers of Witherspoon's writings. The late Dr. Ashbel Green (p. 731, supra) left in MS. (now, 1870, in the Library of the New Jersey Hist. Soc. at Newark) a Memoir of Dr. Witherspoon, which we hope will ere long be given to the world. Extracts from it will be found in Sprague's Annals, ut supra.

3. Novum Testamentum Græcum, ex Codice MS. Alexandrino qui Londini in Bibliotheca Musei [King's MS., 1 D. viii.] asservatur descriptum a Carolo Godofredo Woide, &c., Lon., ex Prelo Joannis Nichols, Typis Jacksonianis, 1786, fol., 500 copies, 50 of which were on fine paper. On vellum, ten copies, six only of which have the various readings. Of these six, Dent's (Pt. 1, 337) copy was sold for £16 16*s.*; Sir M. M. Sykes's (Part 1, 473) for £22 1*s.*; the Duke of Grafton's (50) for £26 5*s.* It may be remembered that Dr. Thomas Smith, as far back as 1679, designed to publish the Alexandrian MS., and was promised by Charles II. a canonry for his reward. See, also, Baber, Rev. H. H.; Tregelles, Samuel Prideaux, LL.D., No. 15. This beautiful Fac-Simile (printed in uncial characters) should be supplemented by—4. Appendix ad Editionem Novi Testamenti Græci, e Codice Alexandrino descripti a C. G. Woide: in qua continentur Fragmenta Novis Testamenti, &c., Oxonii, e Typ. Clar., 1799, fol. Partially prepared for the press by Woide, and completed and edited by Dr. Ford, who added many good notes. Nor must the bibliciast fail to add, Caroli Godofredi Woidii Notitia Codicis Alexandrini, cum Variis ejus Lectionibus omnibus; Recudendum curavit, Notasque adjecit Gottlieb Leberecht Spohn, Lipsiæ, 1790, 8vo. Woide olim descriptum, ad Fidem ipsius Codicis denuo accuratius edidit B. H. Cowper, Londini, Williams & Norgate, and David Nutt, 8vo pp. 504, 12*s.* In this edition is reproduced the exact text of the Codex Alexandrinus, without any deviation from the peculiar orthography of the MS., beyond the development of the construction. In order to present the entire text of the New Testament, the few passages which have been lost from the MS. have been supplied (in brackets) from Kuster's edition of Mill. (The book is beautifully printed, and should stand by the Vatican Codex, Romæ, 1857, 5 vols. r. 4to; l. p., imp. 4to.)

"Though the text of Woide's edition has been taken as the basis, it has been carefully compared with other collations, and as many as several hundred readings having been thus accumulated, they were tested by an examination of the original; and in this way many errors have been corrected."—*Lon. Wolcott, Alexander. The Cup of Trembling, &c.: the approaching Millennial Jubilee, N. York, 1835, 8vo.

Wolcott, Erastus, son of Roger Wolcott, (infra,) a Judge of the Superior Court of Connecticut, d. 1793, aged 70, wrote a religious tract, which was appended to a Sermon at the Interment of E. Wolcott, by Rev. D. McClure, Hartford, 1794, 8vo.

Wolcott, or Wolcot, John, M.D., better known as "Peter Pindar," b. at Dodbrooke, Devonshire, 1738; served an apprenticeship of seven years to his uncle, a physician in Fowey, Cornwall; in 1767 accompanied Sir William Trelawney, Governor of Jamaica, to the West Indies, and after a visit to London returned to Jamaica as a clergyman, (he was ordained by the Bishop of London,) and amused himself by shooting ring-tailed pigeons on Sundays; in 1768, after the death of Trelawney, took his departure for Great Britain, where he spent twelve years in attempts to establish himself as a physician at Truro, Helstone, and other towns in Cornwall; in 1778 gave to the world A Poetical Epistle to the Reviewers, London, 4to, and in the same year published a volume of Poems on Various Subjects, 4to; in 1780 removed with his protégé Opie (see Opie, John) to London, where two years later he amused the public with his Lyric Odes to the Royal Academicians, 4to; and continued until within about five years of his death, which occurred at Somers Town, Jan. 13, 1819, to pour forth a plentiful stream of poetical satires and other pieces, some of which exhibit a rare combination of fluency, wit, point, and vigour. A list of about seventy of his publications—a few of them collections of previously published pieces—will be found in Watt's Bibl. Brit. We notice, in addition to the above-named: Bozzy and Piozzi, or British Biography, 1786, 4to; The Lousiad, a Heroic Comic Poem, 1785–95, 4to; Sir Joseph Banks and the Emperor of Morocco, 1788, 4to; Odes to Mr. Paine, Author of The Rights of Man, 1791, 4to; The Apple Dumplings and a King; Whitbread's Brewery Visited by their Majesties; Peeps at St. James. Collective editions of his Works: 1789–92, 2 vols. 4to; 1793, 2 vols. 4to, also in 3 vols. 8vo; 1794–1801, 5 vols. 8vo; 1809, 4 vols. 12mo; 1812, 5 vols. 8vo; Walker's Classics, 1816, 5 vols. 24mo. Beauties of English Poetry; Selected from the Most Esteemed Authors by Dr. Wolcott, 1804, 2 vols. 12mo.

Wolcott was always ready to libel kings, lords, or commons, without mercy; and, according to John Taylor, (Records of my Life, 1832, 2 vols. 8vo,) the ministry thought it worth while to buy his silence, for a time, with £300 per annum. It was not to be expected that so bold a satirist should escape with impunity; and in William Gifford he found "a foeman worthy of his steel." In the Epistle to Peter Pindar, 1800, 4to, Gifford draws the following portrait of his opponent:

> "A bloated mass, a gross, blood-boltered clod,
> A foe to man, a renegade from God,
> From noxious childhood to pernicious age,
> Separate to infamy in every stage."

As poets are notoriously a genus irritabile, Wolcott's temper was ruffled by these perhaps rather candid comments. He chose to consider them as personal, and liable to be construed to the disadvantage of his character; and this suspicion must have been heightened by Gifford's sequel:

> "Come, then, all filth, all venom, as thou art,
> Rage in thy eye, and rancour in thy heart;
> Come with thy boasted arms, spite, malice, lies,
> Smut, scandal, execrations, blasphemies:
> I brave them all! Lo, here I fix my stand,
> And dare the utmost of thy tongue and hand;
> Prepared each threat to baffle or to spurn,
> Each blow with tenfold vigour to return."

The invitation was accepted. The infuriated Pindar attacked Gifford (as he was entering Wright's shop, in Piccadilly) with a cudgel, which—alas for the hopes of man!—was soon applied "with tenfold vigour," as promised, to his own person. The crowd then finished the business, and Peter was rolled in the kennel, "and thus returned," remarks an unfeeling critic, "to what was often the Castalia of his inspiration." Pindar revenged himself in A Cut at a Cobbler: but his pains were thrown away; the laugh was against him; and, in such contests, this is defeat. Of "honours" there were none to either party.

Wolcott painted with his brush as well as with his pen; and a series of his landscapes was engraved by Aiken, and published in 1797 under the title of Picturesque Views. The "end" of such a life was not "peace." "Is there any thing I can do for you?" asked Taylor, as his friend lay on his death-bed. "Give me back my youth," was the melancholy response that closed a vain and unprofitable career.

"In the lottery of literature . . . Charles Wolfe has been one of the few who have drawn the prize of probable immortality from a casual gleam of inspiration thrown over a single poem consisting of only a few stanzas; and these, too, little more than a spirited version from the poem of another. [See Edin. Annual Register, 1808.] But the lyric is indeed full of fervour and freshness, and his triumph is not to be grudged. . . . The verses

'If I had thought thou could'st have died, in elegance and tender earnestness are worthy of either Campbell or Byron. The 'Ode on the Burial of Sir John Moore' went directly to the heart of the nation, and it is likely to remain forever enshrined there."—D. M. Moir: Poet. Sketches of Lit., ed. 1856, 292.
I might not weep for thee,'

Wollaston, William, b. at Coton Clanford, Staffordshire, 1659, was admitted a pensioner at Sydney College, Cambridge, 1674, took deacon's orders probably about 1681, and shortly afterwards became Assistant Master of Birmingham School; ordained priest, 1686; inherited a large estate from his cousin, 1688, and henceforth passed his time in literary leisure in London; d. "At Palmer's I was employed in composing for the second edition of Wollaston's 'Religion of Nature.' Some of his reasonings not appearing to me well founded, I wrote a little metaphysical piece in which I made remarks on them. It was entitled 'A Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, Pleasure and Pain.' I inscribed it to my friend Ralph. I printed [1725, 8vo, pp. 32] a small number. . . . This is the first edition in which the author's name appears on the title-page. 8th ed., 1759, 8vo, pp. 413. Part third was never completed. 10,000 copies were sold previous to 1738. An abridgment was pub. in 1726.

"There is lately printed a book by Wollaston, wherein all human nature is reduced to one test,—that of truth,—and branched out in every instance of our duty to God and man. The very women read it, and pretend to be charmed with that beauty which they generally think the least of."—Alexander Pope: Letter to Mr. Bethell.

Pope is said to "have taken some thoughts from it into his 'Essay on Man.'"

"The ingenious W. Wollaston maintained that Truth is the Supreme Good, and the source of all pure morality; laying it down as the foundation of his argument that every action is a good one which expresses in act a true proposition."—Tennemann: Johnson's trans., 342.

"Mr. Wollaston's system, that morality consisted in acting according to truth, seems to coincide with that of Dr. Clarke."—Sir James Mackintosh: Second Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., i. (1853) 347, n. See, also, xv. 555.

"Wollaston, the acute author of 'The Religion of Nature Delineated, must also be regarded as an opponent of Locke's fundamental principles."—Morell: Hist. and Crit. View of Spec. Philos., 2d ed., 1837, i. 204.

"For a general view of natural religion, as distinguished, though it cannot be separated, from natural law, the most useful, I think, is Wollaston's treatise. For although he has placed moral obligation on very fanciful grounds, yet the solidity of these duties which he hath shown, in so just and elegant a manner, to arise out of natural religion is not at all diminished by that airy speculation."—Bishop Warburton: Directions to a Student.

See Warburton's Strictures (Divine Legation of Moses) on Wollaston's theory.

"Worthy of the most attentive perusal. Wollaston was unquestionably a learned and ingenious man, and I have always looked on his work as a very useful one."—Bishop Gleig.

"A deep, clear, and masculine treatise, written with the utmost perfection of rational powers, the greatest extent of thought, keenness of perception, and sagacity of mind."—Ryland.

Bishops Lloyd and Van Mildert also commend Wollaston's book. Examinations of it were pub. by Thomas Bott, 1725, John Clarke, and others. See, also, The Religion of Nature Considered, &c., by S. Colliber, 1731–35, 2 vols. 8vo, and Lord Bolingbroke's Philos. Works, Fragment 18. His lordship calls it "strange theism, as dogmatical and absurd as artificial theology," but allows the author to have been "a man of parts, of learning, a philosopher, and a geometrician." See, also, Schlosser's Hist. of Eighteenth Century, and Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 56, 57, 58.

In 1703 he printed for private circulation a small Latin Grammar; and he left in MS. a Hebrew Grammar, twelve learned dissertations, and about eighty sermons. Other treatises, unfinished, were burnt by him or by his orders. See General Account, ut supra; Biog. Wollaston, William Hyde, M.D., son of the Rev. Francis Wollaston, (supra,) was b. Aug. 6, 1776, and educated at Caius College; became a Fellow of the Royal Society, 1793; gained great distinction by his discoveries in chemistry; d. Dec. 22, 1828. He published no book, but contributed to Phil. Trans., 1797–1829, 38 papers, worth more than many books to scientific men.

"He examined with great care the crude platinum ore, discovering in it two new metals, palladium and rhodium, and improving the process for the manufacture of platinum, so as to enable him to realize a handsome fortune. In 1797 he described three new species of urinary calculi—the fusible calculus, the mulberry-calculus, and the bone-earth calculus. He also first described cystic oxide, and urate of solid calculi, the latter formed in the joints of gouty persons. He was the inventor of the periscopic camera, and of numerous ingenious optical and chemical apparatus. To him chemistry is indebted for the methods at present employed for the estimation of ammonia, potash, and magnesia."—Robert Dundas Thomson, M.D.: Rich's Cyc. of Biog.

"It would be difficult to name a man who so well combined the qualities of an English gentleman and a philosopher, or whose life better deserves the eulogium given by the first of our orators [C. J. Fox] to one of our most distinguished public characters, [the Duke of Bedford;] for it was marked by a constant wish and endeavour to be useful to mankind."—Dr. Fitton, President Geolog. Soc.: *Ann. Wolsey, Wulcy, or Wulcey, Thomas, for fifteen years (1515–1529) sovereign of England during the reign of the most despotic of British monarchs, was b. in March, 1471, at Ipswich, (where his father, Robert Wolsey, is supposed to have been a butcher,) and graduated at 15, as "the boy-bachelor," at Magdalene College, Oxford, and was subsequently elected Fellow of his college, and appointed teacher of Magdalene Grammar-School; Rector of Lymington, Somersetshire, 1500; Chaplain to Henry VII., with whom, as well as with the young king, Henry VIII., he was a great favourite; Preb. of Lincoln, Feb. 8, 1508–9; Preb. of Hereford, and Rector of Torrington, 1510; Canon of Windsor, Feb. 17, 1510–11; Registrar of the Order of the Garter, and Dean of Lincoln, 1511; Dean of Hereford, 1512; Preb. of York, Jan. 16, 1512–13; Dean of York, Feb. 19, 1512–13; Bishop of Tournay, in Flanders, and Preb. of Lincoln, 1513; consecrated Bishop of Lincoln, Mar. 26, 1514; Archbishop of York, 1514; Cardinal of St. Cecilia, and Lord-Chancellor, 1515; appointed by the Pope Legate à latere, 1516; Bishop of Bath and Wells in commendam, 1518; Bishop of Durham, 1523; Bishop of Winchester, April 6, 1529; d. at the monastery of Leicester, when under arrest and on his way to London to be tried for high treason, Nov. 29, 1530. Notwithstanding his multiplied honours, still "unsatisfy'd in getting," he sought the popedom also, on the death of Leo X., in 1522, and again on the death of Adrian VI., in 1523, when perhaps the Church of Rome never so greatly needed so long a head and so strong a hand. Well it was for the prospects of the struggling Reformation that Wolsey failed!

However many and great may have been Wolsey's faults, his enlightened zeal in the cause of letters gives him a valid claim to the gratitude of his countrymen and their descendants.

"Insatiable in his acquisitions, but still more magnificent in his expense: Of extensive capacity, but still more unbounded enterprise: Ambitious of power, but still more desirous of glory: Insinuating, engaging, persuasive, and, by turns, lofty, elevated, commanding: Haughty to his equals, but affable to his dependants; oppressive to the people, but liberal to his friends; more generous than grateful; less moved by injuries than by contempt; he was framed to take the ascendant in every intercourse with others, but exerted this superiority of nature with such ostentation as exposed him to envy, and made every one willing to recall the original inferiority, or rather meanness, of his fortune. . . . Literature, which was then in its infancy, found in him a generous patron; and both by his public institutions and private bounty he gave encouragement to every branch of erudition. . . . A strict administration of justice took place during his enjoyment of this high office, [the chancellorship;] and no chancellor ever discovered greater impartiality in his decisions, deeper penetration of judgment, or more enlarged knowledge of law and equity."—Hume: Hist. of Eng., ch. xxvii., xxviii. Nor must we omit the graphic portrait of the great and mighty Cardinal of England and chief statesman of his age by the greatest artist of all countries and all ages:

"This Cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuading;
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.
And though he was unsatisfy'd in getting,
(Which was a sin,) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with him,
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it;
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him:
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died, fearing God."

Wood, Mrs. Anne T. See WILBUR, MISS ANNE T.

Wood, or a Wood, Anthony, b. in Oxford, Dec. 17, 1632, was matriculated at Merton College, Oxford, 1647; graduated A.B. 1652, and M.A. 1655, and employed the rest of his life chiefly in recording the history of the edifices and scholars of his beloved city. Disturbed in his literary pursuits by the announcement that his days were numbered, he "immediately sent to a very good man, his confident, to pray with him, appointing his hours; received the Sacrament the next morning very devoutly; made his Will; went into his study with his two friends, Mr. Bisse and Mr. Tanner, to sort that vast multitude of Papers, Notes, Letters:—about two bushels full he ordered for the fire to be lighted as he was expiring, which was accordingly done, he expressing both his knowledge and his approbation of what was done by throwing out his hands."—Dr. A. Charlett to Archbishop Tenison, Dec. 1, 1695: Nichols's Illust. of Lit. Hist., iii. 403.

1. Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis, duobus Voluminibus comprehensæ, Oxonii, 1674, fol.; some l. p., r. fol. This translation in Latin was made by Mr. Wase and Mr. Peers, under the supervision of Dr. John (afterwards Bishop) Fell, from Wood's English original, (which employed him about ten years.) Wood complained that both of these persons altered and added to suit their own tastes.

"I cannot omit the opportunity of lamenting that Dr. Fell ever proposed a translation of Wood's English work, which would have been infinitely more pleasing in the plain natural dress of its artless but accurate author. The translation in general is allowed to be full of mistakes: it is also stiff and unpleasing, perpetually disgusting to the reader with its affected phraseology."—DR. THOMAS WARTON.

"Above all, this famous university is chiefly indebted to the indefatigable pains of honest Anthony Wood; whose industry, joined with Camden's learning and judgment, would have made a compleat English antiquary. His Historia and Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis gives abundantly more than the whole tribe of the fore-mentioned authors could afford us; and in two large books runs through every particular of her story. . . . The author himself complained of several additions and alterations made without his privity and consent; and seemed to hope that his own English copy, the language whereof, I dare say, was not over-charming, would some time or other hereafter be published."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 127, 128.

Wood therefore made a new copy of his English MS., and nearly a hundred years after his demise it was given to the world: I. The History and Antiquities of the Colleges and Halls in the University of Oxford, by Anthony Wood, M.A., published in English, with a Continuation to the Present Time, by John Gutch, M.A., with an Appendix containing Fasti Oxonienses and Index. 1786, 4to; Appendix, 1790, 4to. II. The History and Antiquities of the University of Oxford, in two Books, by Anthony à Wood, now first published in English from the Original MS. in the Bodleian Library, 1792–96, 2 vols. in 3, 4to. To these 5 vols. should be added PEGGE, REV. SIR JOHN, Nos. 1 and 2. See, also, RAWLINSON, RICHARD, LL.D., No. 1; and Some Notes relating to the History of Oxford and the Places thereabouts, in Hearne's edition of Liber Niger Scaccarii.

The matter of all these works, with the fruits of late investigations, should be moulded into such a History of the University of Oxford as we have referred to in our article on BAKER, THOMAS, p. 105, supra.

2. Athenæ Oxonienses: An Exact History of all the Writers and Bishops who have had their Education in the Most Ancient and Famous University of Oxford, from the Fifteenth Year of Henry the Seventh, 1500, to the End of the Year 1690, representing the Birth, Fortune, Preferment, and Death of all those Authors and Prelates, the Great Accidents of their Lives, and the Fate and Character of their Writings, with the Fasti or Annals of the said University, Lon., 1691–92, 2 vols. fol.; some l. p. To some copies a portrait of Wood, engraved by M. Burghers, is prefixed as a head-piece to the Preface. See RAWLINSON, RICHARD, LL.D. Second edition, to 1695, with about 500 new Lives, 1721, 2 vols. fol.; some l. p. Mr. (afterwards Bishop) Thomas Tanner supplied from Wood's MSS. materials for this edition, for notices of which, see Preface to third edition. New [third] Edition, with Additions, and a Continuation by Philip Bliss, Fellow of St. John's College, 1813–20, 4 (sometimes bound in 5—the Fasti being separate) vols. r. 4to, £15 15*s.*; l. p., 25 copies, imp. 4to: Nassau, Pt. 2, 1534, £42. Turnbull's copy, Dec. 1863, 1446, illustrated with views and portraits, and bound in 10 vols. 4to, was sold for £111. The l. p. edition matches the l. p. editions of Ottley's Hist. of Engraving, and Dibdin's Herbert's Ames's Typ. Antiq. This excellent edition we have already referred to in our notice of Dr. Bliss. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1857, ii. 677. The volumes (which contain upwards of two thousand two hundred Lives) are enriched by the notes of Bishops Humphreys, Kennet, and Tanner, and Messrs. Baker, Bliss, Bowles, Cole, Coningsby, Gray, Loveday, Macro, Morant, T. Park, J. J. Park, Peck, Rawlinson, Sir. P. Sydenham, Wanley, Watts, &c., and some new lives are added in each volume. . The editor also acknowledges his obligations to Messrs. Bandinel, Churton, Conybeare, Ellis, Gilchrist, Hawkins, Kerrick, Lawrence, Mayo, Moseley, Mostyn, Nichols, Routh, and Walker. Volume iv. 437–882 contains Oxford Writers under their Respective Colleges who were alive at Mr. A. Wood's death, 1695; and columns 885–899 are devoted to Some Account of Archbishops and Bishops of the University of Oxford who were living in A.D. 1695. It was Dr. Bliss's intention (we cite from his Prospectus of March 16, 1812, now in our hand) to publish the original separately, and to follow it with supplementary volumes, continuing the register to the year 1800; but this he never accomplished. New [fourth] Edition, with Additions by Philip Bliss, D.C.L., 8vo, Oxf., Eccles. Hist. Soc., vol. i., containing the Life of Wood, 1848. All pub. Society dissolved. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1848, i. 135, 268; Notes and Queries, 1855, Index.

Is there any thing to come of this?

"ST. GILES'S, OXFORD, June 18.

"It is perhaps known to you that Dr. Bliss left to the Bodleian Library his interleaved copy of 'The Athenæ Oxonienses,' in which he had inserted many corrections and some additional matter. As a delegate of the press, I have undertaken to examine his notes with a view to a new edition; and I shall be grateful to any of your readers who will help to make it accurate, by favouring me with a notice of errors or defects in the present volumes.

"I am, &c.,

"JOHN GRIFFITHS."

In Lon. Athen., June 25, 1859, 843.

We regret that so far (December, 1870) we have no announcement of this greatly-desired "new edition," in aid of which the volumes of Nichols's Lit. Anec. and Illust. of Lit., Gent. Mag., (e.g. 1860, ii. 612; 1861, i. 363, 647, and ii. 370, 621,) and Notes and Queries should be carefully scrutinized. We must find room for a few opinions on so famous a book.

"The truth is, his books are little more than a medley of notes and such informations as were sent in from his several correspondents; without being digested into any other method than the throwing them under that particular author's name to which they chiefly related. It is no blemish on his memory to observe that he had his share of that peevishness and austerity, both in his style and manners, which is commonly incident to antiquaries; and thus much we ought gratefully to acknowledge, that he has furnished us with a larger stock of useful material than perhaps any one man of this age has collected. If he was too sullen among courtiers, he paid sufficiently for all the liberty he took, [he was expelled from Oxford for some strictures on the late Earl of Clarendon;] and it is illegal to object to a crime for which a suitable penance has been already enjoined and performed."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 131.

"This is not the first time I have had occasion to remark Wood's industry or research."—DR. BLISS: Athen. Oxon., ii. (1815) 58.

"The indefatigable though tasteless Anthony Wood! . . . . That tasteless though useful drudge."—SIR S. E. BRYDGES: Phillips's Theat. Poet. Anglic., vi., n., viii.

"The dulness of Michael de Marolles and Anthony Wood acquires some value from the faithful representation of men and manners."—GIBBON: Autobiography.

"I cannot subscribe to the opinion Anthony Wood was a dull man, although he had no particular liking for works of imagination, and used ordinary poets scurvily! An author's personal character is often confounded with the nature of his work. Anthony has sallies at times to which a dull man could not be subject; without the ardour of this hermit of literature, where would be our literary history?"—D'ISRAELI: Curiosities of Lit., (Secret History of Authors,) ed. 1851, 371, n.

See, also, Index, and his Miscell. of Lit., (Laborious Authors,) ed. 1853, 88.

It may perhaps strike the reader that Anthony at times pays more respect to Roman Catholics, High Churchmen, and Cavaliers, than to Low Churchmen, Protestant Dissenters, and Roundheads; but, on the other hand, eminent abilities and virtues, and especially profound learning, wherever found, command that hearty applause which is so apt to kindle a generous sympathy in the heart of the liberal reader of any or of no party. To either edition (and the bibliographer should have every edition) of the Athenæ Oxonienses, must be added — A Vindication of the Historiographer of the University of Oxford, and his Works, from the Reproaches of the Lord-Bishop of Salisbury [Burnet] in his Letter to the Lord-Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, &c., Lon., 1693, 4to, pp. 30. Repub. in Athen. Oxon., 2d and 3d edits. It is ascribed to Dr. Wood, Anthony's nephew. See Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., i. (1813) cxiv.; Bohn's Lowndes, 1574, 2982. See, also: I. Wood, Mrs. Henry, formerly Miss Ellen Price, b. in Worcestershire, about 1820, is the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Price, formerly head of a large glove-manufacturing firm in Worcester, and wife of a gentleman connected with the shipping-trade. She has been editor of The Argosy, Dec. 1867 et seq., and a contributor to Bentley's Miscellany, Colburn's New Monthly, Leisure Hour, Quiver, Once a Week, Good Words, Routledge's Magazine, and Routledge's Christmas Annual, and has published the following (London, R. Bentley) in book-form. Most, perhaps all, of these have been republished in the United States, (Phila. and N. York,) where have also appeared many other books bearing her name; and some of her works have been translated into French. Several of her books have been so fortunate as to elicit the commendation of high critical authorities; on the other hand, she has not escaped censure for alleged feebleness, prolixity, and self-repetition. 1. Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies of Great Britain, from the Commencement of the Twelfth Century to the Close of the Reign of Queen Mary; Edited chiefly from Originals in the State Paper Office, the Tower of London, &c., Lon., 1846, 3 vols. p. 8vo; red. to 15*s.*, 1852, 3 vols. p. 8vo. This collection, which embraces 444 letters, A.D. 1103–1558, should accompany ELLIS, SIR HENRY, No. 5, and STRICKLAND, AGNES, Nos. 11, 13. Miss Wood also appears under her married name: see GREEN, MRS. MARY ANNE EVERETT: add to No. 4, Calendar of State Papers, 1661–62, 1861, imp. 8vo.

"In the State Paper Office in London, it is reported, there may be seen a lady with copying clerks under her control, engaged in deciphering, epitomizing, and cataloguing the important parchment State papers and records of several centuries back. This lady, about twenty-five years ago, published a work entitled 'Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies,' which attracted the attention of competent judges for the patient care in selecting authorities and the extensive range of historical research displayed by the authoress. Subsequently, in visiting the State Paper Office, to examine papers, the lady exhibited unusual skill in deciphering old manuscripts, and all the above qualifications combined to point her out as a suitable person to pursue antiquarian researches. She was, therefore, appointed by the British Government as a clerk in the State Paper Office, and she is the only female on the staff of that Department. The above instance has been cited to show that women are qualified to fill positions heretofore supposed only suitable for men."—July 25, 1870.

Wood, Robert, known as "Palmyra Wood," b. at Riverstown, co. of Meath, Ireland, 1716, and educated at Oxford, in 1750, in conjunction with his friends Dawkins and Bouverie, made the antiquarian expedition of which he left lasting memorials in his works on Palmyra and Baalbec. In 1759, whilst engaged on his Essay on Homer, most unfortunately for the interests of letters, (for he had planned other classical works,) the Earl of Chatham made him Under-Secretary of State, and this post he retained during three administrations. He died at his seat at Putney,—the same house in which Gibbon was born, in 1737,—Sept. 9, 1771, and sleeps under sepulchral marble reared by his widow:

"The beautiful editions of Balbec and Palmyra, illustrated by the classic pen of Robert Wood, supply a nobler and more lasting monument, and will survive those august remains."—Inscription by Horace Walpole on Wood's Monument.

"Wood's work renders any other description of Balbec unnecessary."—BURCKHARDT: Travels in Syria.

"The ruins of Baalbec, invisible to the writers of Antiquity, excite the curiosity and wonder of the European traveller. . . . I am much better satisfied with Maundrell's slight octavo (Journey, p. 134–139) than with the pompous folio of Dr. Pocock, (Description of the East, vol. ii. p. 106–113;) but every preceding account is eclipsed by the magnificent description and drawings of MM. Dawkins and Wood, who have transported into England the ruins of Palmyra and Baalbec."—GIBBON: Decline and Fall, ch. li., text and note. See, also, ch. xl., n.; Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 807, 1863, 53, 87.

"Of all the works that distinguish this age, none perhaps excel those beautiful editions of Balbec and Palmyra. . . . And when I endeavour to do justice to the editions of Palmyra and Balbec, I would not confine my encomium to the sculptures. The modest descriptions prefixed are standards of writing; the exact measure of what should and what should not be said, and of what was necessary to be known, was never comprehended in more clear diction or more elegant style. The pomp of the buildings has not a nobler air than the simplicity of the narration."—HORACE WALPOLE. See, also, his comments above.

3. A Comparative View of the Ancient and Present State of the Troad; to which is added an Essay on the Original Genius of Homer, 1768, fol. Privately printed. Bindley, £2.

Wood, William B., b. in Montreal, May 26, 1779, after a short experience of mercantile life in the counting-house of John Pintard, of the city of New York, (supra,) became connected with Wignell's theatrical company at Annapolis in 1798, and in December of the same year made his first appearance on the Philadelphia stage, where he acted with great success for many years; was manager of theatres in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, 1810-30; finally abandoned the stage, Nov. 18, 1846, and spent the remainder of his life, which terminated Sept. 23, 1861, in retirement, cheered by the respect and attentions of his fellow-citizens in Philadelphia.

Among the many plays altered and adapted to the American stage by Mr. Wood were the following: Schiller's Robbers, and The Minister, or Cabal and Love, (acted as The Harper's Daughter,) by the same; Joanna Baillie's De Montfort, and her Family Legend; Lord Byron's Two Foscari; Kotzebue's Count Benzowsky. He published Personal Recollections of the Stage, embracing Notices of Actors, Authors, and Auditors, during a Period of Forty Years, Phila., 1854, (some 1858,) 12mo, pp. 478.

Wood, Sir William Page, second son of the late Sir Matthew Wood, Bart., M.P., b. in London, 1801, and educated at, and Fellow of, Trinity College, Cambridge; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1827, and made Q.C., 1845; M.P. for Oxford, Aug. 1847–Dec. 1852; Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster, 1849–51; Solicitor-General, 1851–Dec. 1852; Vice-Chancellor, Dec. 1852–1868; Lord Justice of Appeal in Chancery, and a member of the Privy Council, Lord Chancellor, and Baron Hatherly, all in 1868. See, also, Goode, Wm., No. 10.

"On the retirement of the Disraeli ministry, Wood was appointed Lord Chancellor, with the title of Baron Hatherly. The selection is believed to be a judicious one. Wood, though not ranking high as an orator, has shown himself to be a sound and able lawyer, most honest and conscientious, and wonderfully industrious and painstaking. While his courtesy and kindness have won for him the affection of the English Bar, to the world at large he is known as a sincere and devoted Churchman, but tolerant of the opinions of others."—Dec, 1868.

"For the last thirty-eight years this great lawyer and good man has been a regular Sunday-school teacher in the parish in Westminster, where he has resided all that time."—May, 1869.

"Under a very modest guise, this volume contains a condensed and forcible argument in support of the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures and of the truth of the Christian interpretation of them. Such a work deserves, for several reasons, an especial welcome. Here is a man of conspicuous ability and a singularly judicial habit of mind, who has devoted a good deal of time to religious studies, and who pronounces an unhesitating conviction that the old doctrines are unshaken, and that the critics, whatever their learning, are very untrustworthy in their logic. He has thus rendered the Church an immense service, and has earned from her a debt of deep gratitude."—Lon. Times.

"I have to differ from the author on two points: his recommending the frog as an example, and his description of the side-stroke, which he says with the legs is precisely the same as in breast swimming. Mr. Woodbridge . . . had the misfortune to lose a leg at the age of 19, so that probably he never was acquainted with the total difference between the two strokes."—Olphar Hamst, (Ralph Thomas:) List of Works on Swimming, (appended to A Few Words on Swimming, by R. The long-continued neglect of Wooddeson's Lectures (the 2d London edition, published forty-one years after the first, has for thirty-six years been the last!) is very little to the credit of the profession. Francis's sale in 1838, (presented to him by Woodfall,) without MS. notes or corrections, £2 2*s.* Third edition, edited by John Wade, 1850, 2 vols. p. 8vo, 7*s.* See Junius, (p. 1002.) Sir Philip Francis, long before he was suspected of the authorship of these famous letters, is stated to have written thus concerning them:

"What a fuss about Junius,—a much overrated writer!" See Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 205.

Woodfall, Henry Sampson, publisher of The Public Advertiser. See Junius, (p. 1002.) In his Dedication (ed. 1772, 2 vols. sm. 8vo) Junius remarks, inter alia,

"This book will, I believe, be found to contain principles worthy to be transmitted to posterity. . . . This is not the language of vanity. If I am a vain man, my gratification lies within a narrow circle. I am the sole depository of my own secret, and it shall perish with me."

Ninety-eight years have since passed, and the authorship of Junius is as great a mystery as ever, (1870.) That Sir Philip Francis was the amanuensis and assistant (ignorant of his principal) of Junius is not improbable. To the authorities cited in our article on Junius we add, Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man., Part 5, (1860,) 1240–45.

Woodfall, William, brother of Henry Sampson Woodfall, (supra,) b. 1745 or 1746, d. Aug. 1, 1803, assisted his father in printing and editing The Public Advertiser; was subsequently editor of The London Packet, and then editor and printer of The Morning Chronicle, which he left in 1789, on setting up The Diary, in which he gave to the world his famous Parliamentary Debates. Woodfall's Parliamentary Debates, 1794–1799, were published consecutively in 21 vols. 8vo. See other publications by him in Watt's Bibl. Brit. His memory was one of the most marvellous on record:

"Without taking a note to assist his memory, without the use of an amanuensis to ease his labour, he has been known to write sixteen columns, after having sat in a crowded gallery for as many hours, without an interval of rest."—Annual Register, 1804: Obituary of Woodfall.

He was the first to introduce the system of immediate detailed parliamentary reports. In early age he appeared several times on the stage, and he adapted for representation Sir Thomas Overbury, 1777, 8vo. See Biog. Dramat.; Records of my Life, by the Late John Taylor, 1832, 2 vols. 8vo.

Woodhead, Abraham, b. at Meltham, Yorkshire, 1608; entered University College, 1624, and was elected Fellow, 1633; took holy orders, and became famous for his learning; in 1641, in which year he was Proctor of Oxford, visited Rome and became a secret convert to the Roman Catholic religion, which, in later years, he taught orally and by many anonymous treatises, (see WALKER, OBADIAH;) deprived of his fellowship by the Parliamentary Visitors, 1648; restored, 1660; unwilling longer to conform to the Church of England, obtained from his college a travelling allowance of £20, on which he lived in concealment, teaching Roman Catholic pupils and writing controversial books, at Hoxton, near London, until his death, 1678. 1. "Among the polemic writers of the seventeenth century few are more generally read or respected than the celebrated Abraham Woodhead. . . . The style of them is so bad, the matter so confused, and sentences so perplexed by parentheses as to make the perusal of them an exertion too great for the generality of readers."—CHARLES BUTLER.

He recommends that some one favour us "with the Spirit of Abraham Woodhead." Alban Butler placed a high estimate on Woodhead's works. The readers of the books of Peter Heylin, E. Stillingfleet, Archbishop Wake, and Drs. Aldrich, Smalridge, Harrington, Tully, Hooper, and Whitby, will often meet with the name of this famous disputant and holy man, of whom one of England's most learned antiquaries does not scruple to write,

Woodhouse, James, "The Poetical Shoemaker," was in 1764, he being at that time quite a lion in London, the means, or rather the excuse, of the first interview between Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Thrale. See Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 170, n., and Mrs. Piozzi's and Woodhouse's accounts, written in 1810, —forty-six years afterwards,—in Blackw. Mag., xxvi. 754. His early poetical attempts were encouraged by his neighbour Shenstone, of the Leasowes. In his later years Woodhouse kept a little bookseller's shop. 1. He took an active part in the establishment of The American Tract Society, The American Education Society, The Temperance Society, The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, &c. In the last-named he served as a member of The Prudential Committee for about 25 years. He published a collective edition of his Works, in 5 vols. r. 8vo, Andover, 1849–50, (also 1851, 1857, and 1860.) Contents: i., ii., iii., Lectures; iv., Letters and Essays; v., Essays and Sermons. Reviewed in Chris. Rev., xvi. 377; Bibl. Sacra., viii. 25, (by H. Humphrey;) Chris. Exam., li. 1, (by R. Stebbins.)

"Dr. Woods has erected an enduring monument to his memory, which we doubt not will long be cherished with affection and respect. All the works here collected bear the impress of a perspicuous, wise, and devout mind, and may be recommended to a very large class of readers as a storehouse of theological truth. We hope to have an opportunity of presenting a more extended estimate of the character of these volumes."—Professor Hodge: Princeton Review.

"The works of Dr. Woods have to me, I must say, a peculiar charm. They have a vividness of thought and language, as well as an accuracy of Scriptural truth and a healthy soundness of theological system, which very many readers will be prepared to value."—Rev. Dr. Burder.

"We earnestly recommend these valuable works to our younger ministers, and especially to students in theology. In our judgment, they cannot find an uninspired guide more worthy of their acquaintance and their confidence."—Lon. Evan. Mag.

"It was a kind providence for the New England churches that . . . a man like Dr. Woods was called to the chair of theology in the seminary at Andover. He is emphatically the 'judicious' divine of the later New England theology. He educated a generation of preachers [more than 1000 in number] who had neither crotchets nor airy aims."—Henry B. Smith, D.D.: Amer. Theolog. Rev., Jan. 1862, 48.

Dr. Woods left in MS., almost complete, a History of the Theological Seminary in Andover. This has not yet (1870) been given to the world. Whence the delay? To the article on Mrs. M. W. Woods, Leonard, Jr., D.D., LL.D., son of the preceding, and characterized as a person "of rare mental powers and scholarship," (Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 619,) was ordained in 1833, and in 1839 succeeded Dr. William Allen as President of Bowdoin College; resigned 1866. 1. Lectures on Christian Theology; translated from the Writings of George Christian Knapp, N. York and Andover, 1831–33, 2 vols. 8vo; Lon., 1841, 8vo, (Ward's Lib. of Stand. Div., xxxv.;) 7th ed., Phila., 1858, 8vo. A work of great value. See Eclec. Rev., 1828. Dr. Woods's translation was commended as "accurate and faithful" by Chris. Exam., (Boston,) and censured for unfaithfulness by Evangel. Rev., (Gettysburg,) July, 1858, 151. 2. Address on the Life and Character of Parker Cleaveland, LL.D., Portland, 1859, 8vo, pp. 61; Brunswick, 1860, 8vo. From Maine Hist. Soc. Coll., vol. vi. Woodward, John, M.D., an eminent geologist, founder of the professorship of geology at Cambridge, was b. in Derbyshire, 1665, and studied philosophy, anatomy, and physic under Dr. Peter Barwick, in whose house he was resident, and chiefly by whose influence he was in 1692 elected Professor of Physic in Gresham College; d. 1728. 1. An Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth and Terrestrial Bodies, especially Minerals, as also of the Sea, Rivers, and Springs; with an Account of the Universal Deluge, and of the Effects that it had upon the Earth, Lon., 1695, 8vo; 2d ed., 1702, 8vo; 3d ed., 1723, 8vo; 4th ed., 1726, 8vo. In Latin, by J. J. Scheuchzer, Historia Telluris, &c., Tiguri, 1704, 8vo. See ARBUTHNOT, JOHN, M.D., (add 1695, 8vo; 1697, 8vo;) HUTCHINSON, JOHN; ROBINSON, THOMAS, No. 2. It was also attacked by Dr. Martin Lister, in three pieces. All these objectors were answered by John Harris, D.D., in his Remarks on some Late Papers relating to the Universal Deluge, and to the Natural History of the Earth, 1697, 8vo. The Latin translation, 1704, 8vo, elicited some objections from Leibnitz and others, (expressed in letters to the author;) and Elias Camerarius, of Tübingen, attacked it in some Latin dissertations printed in 1712. Woodward replied in—2. Naturalis Historia Telluris illustrata et aucta; una cum ejusdem defensione; præsertim contra nuperas objectiones El. Camerarii, Lon., 1714, 8vo. In English, by Benjamin Holloway, with an Introduction, (and Supplement and Continuation supplied by Woodward,) 1726, 8vo. See Camerarius's address in the German Ephemerides, 1717; Edin. Rev., xxix. 316; MORTON, JOHN, No. 1. In speaking of the origin of the Indians, Dr. Cotton Mather expresses the opinion that the subject would be settled when Woodward should publish his Natural History. The work introduced important truths: it is no marvel that it should also contain some grave errors. It was intended only as a precursor to a great work on the same subject, for which he was gathering materials until death would wait no longer:—the old story, (see BAKER, THOMAS; COLE, WILLIAM.)

3. Brief Instructions for making Observations in all Parts of the World; as also for Collecting, Preserving, and Sending Over Natural Things, 1696, 8vo. Anon. 4. Woolley, John. Sermon, Gen. xiii. 8, Lon., 1675, 4to.

Woolley, John, D.D., D.C.L., educated at University College, London, and Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1836, became successively Head-Master of Rossall School, Lancashire, and of King Edward's Grammar-School, Norwich, and resigned the last in 1852, on becoming Professor of Logic and Classics in the University of Sydney, Australia, of which he was elected Principal. In 1865 he paid a visit to England, and on his return voyage was lost in the "London," Jan. 11, 1866.

"He is remembered by many whom he left in England as the good man—John Woolley. . . . To whose worth and talents Dean Stanley and others have paid the very warmest tribute, as, indeed, have a host of the scholarly and worthy of the land." —Story of the Wreck of the Australian Steamship The "London," 1866, 12mo.

"Get the writings of John Woolman by heart; and love the early Quakers."—Charles Lamb: Elia: A Quakers' Meeting.

"January 22d, [1824.]—Rode to London from Bury on the 'Telegraph.' I was reading, all the time it was light, Irving's 'Argument of Judgment to Come,' which I have since finished. It is a book of great power, but, on the whole, not calculated to resolve doubts. It is more successful in painting strongly to believers the just inferences from the received doctrine. It is written rather to alarm than persuade; and to some would have the effect of deterring from belief.

"How different this from John Woolman's Journal I have been reading at the same time! A perfect gem! His is a schöne Seele, (beautiful soul.) An illiterate tailor, he writes in a style of the most exquisite purity and grace. His moral qualities are transferred to his writings. Had he not been so very humble, he would have written a still better book; for, fearing to indulge in vanity, he conceals the events in which he was a great actor. His religion is love. His whole existence and all his passions were love! If one could venture to impute to his creed, and not to his personal character, the delightful frame of mind which he exhibited, one could not hesitate to be a convert. His Christianity is most inviting,—it is fascinating. . . . May 18th. —Called on Irving. . . . I left him 'John Woolman,' a book which exhibits a Christian all love. Woolman was a missionary, and Irving is writing on the missionaries. He called it a godsend. . . . January 9th, [1826.]—On the road, a few miles out of London, we took up a very gentlemanly Quaker. . . . He told me his name on my making an inquiry concerning Hudson Gurney. I was speaking to J. J. Gurney. We soon entered on controversial subjects. I praised a work of Quaker autobiography, without naming it. He said, 'Thou meanest "John Woolman;"' and added, 'Let me not take credit for a sagacity I do not possess. Amelia Opie has told me of thy admiration of the book.'"—*Diary, &c. of H. C. "A cast from Thomas Woolner's statue of Macaulay has been placed in the South Kensington Museum. It represents him gowned and seated in his chair. He turns half round, in an extremely natural way, but without, at the same time, any of that dramatic effect which such an action would imply in the work of an ordinary sculptor. Mr. Woolner has now added another to that list of illustrious men whom he has fixed in marble for coming generations. They will thank him for showing them how Tennyson, Maurice, Carlyle, Macaulay, looked."—August, 1866.

"Mr. Woolner is to execute, by request, a bust of Charles Dickens; he has the advantage of a mask which was cast for the purpose. Thus another will be added to the noble series of likenesses of eminent men, for which posterity will thank this artist; it includes those of the Laureate, Mr. Browning, Mr. Carlyle, Prof. Sedgwick, Sir W. Woolsey, Theodore Dwight, D.D., LL.D., a nephew of President Timothy Dwight, b. in the city of New York, 1801, graduated at Yale College, 1820, and subsequently studied theology at Princeton, and Greek in Germany; was Professor of Greek in Yale College, 1831 to 1851, and has been President of the institution from 1846 to the present time, (1870.) As an author, he is very favourably known by five excellent manuals, (each containing the Greek text with his own English Notes,) of which there have been many editions prepared for the Use of Colleges in the United States, viz.: 1. The Alcestis of Euripides, Camb., 1834, 12mo. See No. 2. 2. The Antigone of Sophocles, 1835, 12mo.

"The Essays here brought together originally appeared in the New Englander, [1867–68,] where they attracted wide attention from the exactness and thoroughness with which they discussed the legal effects of this great question, as well as from the sound discrimination displayed in the examination of its social aspects."—Publishers' Advert.

"The book does not strike us as one of very remarkable ability or power, and the author's style is rather heavy and unattractive. The most reliable portion is, we think, the historical part. The legal portion is of little real use to a lawyer, and the doctrinal and exegetical portions are in many respects meagre, and do not include a sufficient consideration of many of the most delicate and difficult of the considerations involved."—Amer. Lit. Gaz., Aug. 2, 1869, 180.

Dr. Woolsey has also published single sermons, and contributed to Chris. Quar. Spec., Bibl. Sacra, Bibl. Repos., N. Englander, Jour. of the Amer. Orient. "He made an attempt to destroy the credit of the Gospel History by the bold and singular hypothesis that the whole of it is merely Allegory or Fable; maintaining that it is utterly incredible as a matter of fact, and that it was never intended by the Evangelists themselves to be understood in any other than a mystical or parabolical sense."—Bishop Van Mildert.

"He might at the same rate of arguing have undertaken to prove that there was no such person as Jesus Christ or his apostles, or that they were only allegorical persons, and that Christianity was never planted or propagated in the world at all."—Leland's Deist. Writers, Letter VIII.

"His objections have been sufficiently answered by almost all his antagonists; the most valuable of which are Stevenson, Dr. Lardner, Bishop Pearce, and the author of the Trial of the Witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus. An abstract of their most curious and important thoughts may be seen in our notes on the Harmony of the Evangelists on those texts which he has excepted against."—Dr. Doddridge.

"While some supposed this author not in earnest, but meaning to subvert Christianity under a pretence of defending it; others believed him disordered, and not perfectly in his right mind: and many circumstances concurred to persuade to the latter of these opinions."—Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxxii. 284.

"The letters [Discourses] were written with a coarseness and irreverence so singular, even in the attacks of that age, that it were well if they could be attributed to insanity. They contain the most undisguised abuse which had been uttered against Christianity since the days of the early heathens. . . . In classifying Woolston with later writers against Miracles, he may be compared in some cases, though with striking differences of tone, with those German rationalists, like Paulus, who have rationalized the miracles, but in more cases with those who, like Strauss, have idealized them. His method, however, is an appeal to general probability, rather than to literary criticism."—A. S. Farrar: Crit. Hist. of Free Thought, 1863, Lect. IV. See, also, Note 22, at end.

Worcester, Edward Somerset, second Marquis of, and Earl of Glamorgan, eldest son of Henry Somerset, first Marquis of Worcester, was b. about 1601, and, after a sad experience of the ingratitude of Charles II. and the ignorant contempt of his countrymen, d. April 3, 1667.

"The Marquess of Worcester had recently observed the expansive power of moisture rarefied by heat. After many experiments, he had succeeded in constructing a rude steam-engine, which he called a fire-water work, and which he pronounced to be an admirable and most forcible instrument of propulsion. But the Marquess was suspected to be a madman, and known to be a Papist. His invention therefore found no favourable reception."—Lord Macaulay: Hist. of Eng., i. ch. iii.

The Century of Inventions of the Marquis of Worcester, from the Original MS., with Historical and Explanatory Notes, and a Biographical Memoir, by C. F. Partington, with Portrait and Wood Engravings, 1825, 12mo. Favourably reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1825, 397. Horace Walpole (R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., iii. 97) calls The Century of Inventions an "amazing piece of folly;" and Hume (Hist. of Eng., vii. note o) styles it "a ridiculous compound of lies, chimeras, and impossibilities." We had long known better than this, but were only within the last few years made aware of the extent of our obligations to his lordship, by the publication of The Life, Times, and Scientific Labours of the Second Marquis of Worcester; to which is added a Reprint of his "Century of Inventions," 1663, with a Commentary thereon, by Henry Dircks, Esq., C.E., with Portrait, 1865, 8vo, pp. xxiv., 624, £1 4*s.*; l. p., 4to, with India proofs before letters, £4 4*s.*: 30 copies. Favourably reviewed in Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 416. Worcester, Henry Somerset, first Marquis of, and Earl of Glamorgan, a lineal descendant of King Edward III., and father of Edward Somerset, second Marquis of Worcester, (supra,) was matriculated at Magdalene College, Oxford, in 1591, aged 14; served with great fidelity King Charles I., who, in return, seems to have treated him as badly as his son Charles II. treated the Marquis's son; d. 1646. He was a devout Roman Catholic. 1. Certamen Religiosum; or, A Conference between Charles, King of England, and Henry, late Marquess and Earl of Worcester, concerning Religion, &c., Lon., 1649, 8vo. Probably printed by Rastell. There is another edition, (or another impression with a different title-page,) described as in 4to, without printer's name, date, or place.

Tiptoft also translated Two Declarations made by Publius Cornelius Scipio and Gayus Flamyneus, Competitors for the Love of Lucrece, and left some pieces in MS. See Bale; Pits; Tanner; Leland; Fuller's Worthies; Ames's Typ. Antiq.; Wood's Hist. and Antiq.; Park's R. and N. Authors, i. 200; Park's Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ; Oldys's Librarian, 255.

Worcester, Joseph Emerson, LL.D., second son of Jesse Worcester, (supra,) was b. in Bedford, New Hampshire, Aug. 24, 1784; graduated at Yale College, 1811; was for several years engaged in teaching at Salem, Mass., and passed two years at Andover; in 1820 removed to Cambridge, Mass., and resided there for the most part until his death, Oct. 27, 1865.

His works (we give below the dates of the first and of some of the later editions) have done much to promote public and private education; and the verdict pronounced thirty years since by an eminent critic would be endorsed by many at the present moment:

"In all his publications he has exhibited a conscientious love of accuracy, as well as intelligence, which has stamped them all with a superior value in the estimation of those whose favorable judgment in matters of this sort is most to be desired."—O. W. B. PEABODY: N. Amer. Rev., xli. (Oct. 1835) 484.

"This Dictionary is formed on a plan similar to that of the 'Universal and Critical Dictionary' of the author [No. 14, supra] published in 1846; but it is much larger and more comprehensive. The 'Universal Dictionary' contains, in addition to the words found in Todd's edition of Johnson's Dictionary, nearly 27,000 words, for which authorities are given. In addition to these, this work contains about 19,000 words, which have been derived from a great variety of sources; the total number being about 104,000. Authorities are given for almost all the words that are inserted. . . . He has availed himself of the aid of the following collaborators or assistants,—namely, Messrs. Richard Soule, Jr., William A. Wheeler, Loomis J. Campbell, William P. Drew, Joseph Hale Abbot, and John S. Dwight, who have afforded great assistance in the preparation of the work. The author would also express his acknowledgments to," &c.—Preface, iii., vi., (q. v.)

"The task of preparing the Memoirs of Wordsworth, entrusted to his nephew by the poet himself, has been discharged in a manner which leaves no room for future biographers."—N. Amer. Rev., lxxiii. 487. See, also, xcvi. 221.

"The signal failure of Dr. Wordsworth to convey an adequate idea of his uncle's character and career left the stage empty for Mr. January Searle, [q. v., No. 4.] Again the performer has proved unequal to his part."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1853, art. viii.

"There is nothing to commend in these volumes on the score of critical acumen. . . . On the whole, these are two ponderous and unattractive volumes. . . . Something of this is due, no doubt, to the unskilfulness of the biographer; but, when that is allowed for, the feeling remains that the reputation of the Poet loses more than it gains by the publication of his Notes and Memoirs."—*Lon. Part 4, General Epistles and Book of Revelation, 1860. Index to Parts 1–4, by the Rev. J. Twycross, 1861, imp. 8vo, 4*s*. New ed., Parts 1, 2, 3, 4, in 2 vols. imp. 8vo, 1862, £4; with Index, 1867, £4 4*s*. The biblicist must place beside these valuable volumes the Greek Testaments of Bishop Ellicott, Dean Alford, and Dr. Cardwell.

"In Dr. Wordsworth the Patristic spirit of interpretation predominates; in Bishop Ellicott, . . . the sound old English theology of the seventeenth century; in Dean Alford, the German element. But none of them excludes the others. All of them have entered into that haunted chamber of German theology, which only requires to be unlocked and thrown open to the light, to lose its fascinations and terrors. All of them face that formidable phantom of textual criticism, with its 120,000 various readings in the New Testament alone, and will enable us to march up to it and discover that it is empty air,—that still we may say, with the boldest and acutest of English critics, Bentley, 'Choose (out of the whole MSS.) as awkwardly as you will; choose the worst by design out of the whole lump of readings; and not one article of faith or moral precept is either lost or perverted in them. Put them into the hands of a knave or a fool, and, even with the most sinistrous and absurd choice, he shall not extinguish the light of any one chapter, or so disguise Christianity but that every feature of it will still be the same.'"—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1863, art. iv.: Editions of the Greek Testament.

"Wordsworth, rich in solid matter, depends too much upon the past: he is often patristic to the point of feebleness. Alford, whose plan is admirable, wears too often the air of one who has crammed for the occasion,—whose scholarship lies on him and is not fully in him. In clearness, ripe judgment, and precision, we give Ellicott the first rank. As books to read, his commentaries are less pleasing than either of the others; as books for study, they are models."—CHARLES P. KRAUTH, D.D.: Lutheran, Mar. 24, 1862.

Wordsworth, William, D.C.L., second son of John Wordsworth, attorney-at-law, and law-agent to Sir James Lowther, afterwards Earl of Lonsdale, by Anne Cookson, of the Crackanthorpes of Westmoreland, was b. at Cockermouth, Cumberland, April 7, 1770; studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, from Oct. 1787 till Jan. 1791, and subsequently spent fifteen months in France; in 1795 inherited, from an admirer of his genius, £900, which, with his share of £8500 paid to the family by the second Lord Lonsdale on account of a debt due by his father's estate, enabled him to live without recourse to a profession; in 1795 settled with his only sister Dorothy (his beloved intellectual associate for many happy years) at Racedown Lodge, near Crewkerne, Dorsetshire; and in 1799, after returning from a visit to Germany, in which he was accompanied by Coleridge and Mrs. Wordsworth, took up his residence at Grasmere, where he remained until 1808, when he removed to Allan Bank, his home for the next five years; in 1813 he settled at Rydal Mount, and here—with the exception of occasional visits to London, a second tour in Scotland in 1814, a continental tour in 1820, a tour in Holland and Belgium in 1823, in North Wales in 1824, on the Rhine in 1828, in Ireland in 1829, in Scotland in 1833, in Italy in 1837, &c.—he remained until his death, in his 81st year, April 23, 1850. He was Stamp Distributor for the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland (worth about £500 per annum) from 1813 until 1842, when he resigned in favour of his younger son; in 1843 he succeeded Southey as Poet-Laureate; and he enjoyed a Government pension of £300 a year until his death. In 1803 he was married to Miss Mary Hutchinson, whom he had known in her childhood, and by this lady he had five children, viz.: I. John, b. 1803; II. Dora, (see Quillinan, Mrs. Dora,) b. 1804; III. Thomas, b. 1806; IV. Catherine, b. 1808; V. William, b. 1810. His wife, (d. 1859, aged 88,) his sister Dorothy, (d. 1855, aged 84,) and two of his sons survived him. In his early days he was a warm republican, and an admirer of the French Revolution; but his opinions became more "conservative" and "orthodox;" and for the last forty or fifty years of his life he zealously supported the Established Church, and died in its bosom. In 1818 he published, in the Conservative interest, Two Addresses to the Freeholders of Westmoreland. Accustomed for many years to unsparing ridicule, (which he had learned to endure with philosophical equanimity,) the standing target for reviewers, (from the formidable Jeffrey of the Edinburgh to the anonymous scribbler for the Monthly,) and the butt of literary and social circles, he lived long enough to exchange contempt for honours, and excessive depreciation for equally extravagant laudation. The humiliation of a late conversion is not favourable to dispassionate criticism; and a long-despised minority find it hard to exercise the toleration from which they themselves were so rigorously excluded:

"Let me render justice to Professor Wilson, as well as to myself: not for a moment, not by a solitary movement of reluctance or demur, did either of us hang back in giving that public acclamation which we, by so many years, had anticipated; yes, we singly—we, with no sympathy to support us from any quarter. The public press remains, with its inexorable records, to vouch for us, that we paid an oriental homage as to one who could have pleaded antique privilege, and the commemoration of centuries, at a time when the finger of scorn was pointed at Mr. Wordsworth from every journal in the land; and that we persisted in this homage at a period long enough removed to have revolutionized the public mind, and also long enough to have undermined the personal relations between us of confidential friendship. Did it ask no courage to come forward, in the first character, as solitary friends, holding up our protesting hands amidst a wilderness of chattering buffoons?"—De Quincey: Lit. Reminis.: William Wordsworth.

But to these two early eulogists of Wordsworth's poetry there is to be added—not to name Coleridge, Talfourd, and others—at least one admirer whose devotion was profound, unfailing, and reverential,—the poet himself:

"Wordsworth came at half-past eight, and stopped to breakfast; talked a good deal; spoke of Byron's plagiarisms from him; the whole third canto of 'Childe Harold' founded on his style and sentiments; the feeling of natural objects which is there expressed, not caught by B. from nature herself, but from him, (Wordsworth,) and spoiled in the transmission; 'Tintern Abbey' the source of it all; from which same poem, too, the celebrated passage about Solitude, in the first canto of 'Childe Harold,' is (he said) taken, with this difference, that what is naturally expressed by him has been worked by Byron into a laboured and antithetical sort of declamation. . . . We [Moore and Lady Davy] talked of Wordsworth's exceedingly high opinion of himself; and she mentioned that one day, in a large party, Wordsworth, without any thing having been previously said that could lead to the subject, called out suddenly from the top of the table to the bottom, in his most epic tone, 'Davy!' and on Davy's putting forth his head, in awful expectation of what was coming, said, 'Do you know the reason why I published "The White Doe" in quarto?' 'No; what was it?' 'To show the world my own opinion of it.'"—Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, (Diary, Oct. 27, 1820,) iii. 161, 163.

"After a while he [Professor Wilson] digressed to Wordsworth and Southey, and asked me [N. P. Willis] if I was going to return by the Lakes. I proposed doing so. 'I will give you letters to both, if you haven't them. I lived a long time in that neighbourhood, and know Wordsworth perhaps as well as any one. Many a day I have walked over the hills with him, and listened to his repetition of his own poetry.' . . . 'Did Wordsworth repeat any other poetry than his own?' 'Never in a single instance, to my knowledge.' . . . 'Was the story true that was told in the papers of his seeing, for the first time, in a large company, some new novel of Scott's in which there was a motto taken from his works, and that he went immediately to the shelf and took down one of his own volumes, and read the whole poem to the party, who were waiting for a reading of the new book?' 'Perfectly true. It happened in this very house. Wordsworth was very angry at the paragraph, and, I believe, accused me of giving it to the world. I was as much surprised as himself, however, to see it in print.'"—N. P. Willis's Pencillings by the Way: New York Mirror, 1835.

We add a few words on his appearance and conversation:

"North.—'Did you ever meet any of the Lake Poets in private society?'

"Tickler.—'Five or six times. Wordsworth has a grave, solemn, pedantic, awkward, out-of-the-worldish look about him, that rather puzzles you as to his probable profession, till he begins to speak,—and then, to be sure, you set him down at once for a Methodist preacher.'

"North.—'I have seen Chantrey's bust.'

"Tickler.—'The bust flatters his head, which is not intellectual. The forehead is narrow, and the scull altogether too scanty. Yet the baldness, the gravity, and the composure are impressive, and, on the whole, not unpoetical. The eyes are dim and thoughtful; and a certain sweetness of smile occasionally lightens up the strong lines of his countenance with an expression of courteousness and philanthropy.'

"North.—'Is he not extremely eloquent?'

"Tickler.—'Far from it. He labours like a whale spouting,—his voice is wearisomely monotonous,—he does not know when to have done with a subject,—oracularly announces perpetual truisms,—never hits the nail on the head,—and leaves you amazed with all that needless pother, which the simple bard opines to be eloquence, and which passes for such with his Cockney idolaters and his catechumens at Ambleside and Keswick.'

"North.—'Not during dinner, surely?'

"Tickler.—'Yes,—during breakfast, lunch, dinner, tea, and supper,—every intermediate moment; nor have I any doubt that he proses all night long in his sleep.'

"North.—'Shocking, indeed!'"—Noctes Ambros., No. XXI., Sept. 1825: Blackw. Mag., xviii. 383. See, also, xxvii. 436.

We will give a specimen—he was modest enough to esteem it a solitary instance—of his wit:

"At a friend's house, after dinner, the conversation turned upon wit and humour. The author of Lalla Rookh, who was present, gave some illustrations from Sheridan's 'sayings, doings, and writings.' Starting from his reverie, Wordsworth said that he did not consider himself to be a witty poet: 'indeed,' continued he, 'I do not think I was ever witty but once in my life.' A great desire was naturally expressed by all to know what this special drollery was. After some hesitation, the old poet said, 'Well, well, I will tell you. I was standing some time ago at the entrance of my cottage at Rydal Mount. A man accosted me with the question, "Pray, sir, have you seen my wife pass by?" Whereupon I said, "Why, my good friend, I didn't know till this moment that you had a wife!"' The company stared, and, finding that the old bard had discharged his entire stock, burst into a roar of laughter, which the facetious Wordsworth, in his simplicity, accepted as a genuine compliment to the brilliancy of his wit."

List of Wordsworth's Works, with Criticisms.

1. An Evening Walk: an Epistle in Verse, addressed to a Young Lady from the Lakes of the North of England, Lon., 1793, 4to, pp. 27.

"There are passages in his poems which display imagination, and which afford hope for the future; but, if he can divest himself of all partiality, and will critically question every line that he has written, he will find many which, he must allow, call loudly for amendment."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1793, iii. 218.

2. Descriptive Sketches in Verse, taken during a Pedestrian Tour in the Italian, Grison, Swiss, and Savoyard Alps, 1793, 4to, pp. 55.

"During the last year of my residence at Cambridge, 1794, I became acquainted with Mr. Wordsworth's first publication, entitled Descriptive Sketches; and seldom, if ever, was the emergence of an original poetic genius above the literary horizon more evidently announced."—Coleridge: Biographia Literaria.

So thought not the critic of the Lon. Month. Review, 1793, iii. 216.

3. Lyrical Ballads, with a Few Other Poems, 1798, 12mo, pp. 210: anon.; 2d ed., 1800, 2 vols. 12mo; 3d ed., 1802, 2 vols. 12mo. Repub., 1805. The first edition was sold for thirty guineas to Joseph Cottle, who lost by the 500 copies he published. The first piece in the volume is Coleridge's Rime of the Ancyent Marinere; the other pieces, 22 in number, are Wordsworth's.

"So much genius and originality are discovered in this publication, that we wish to see another from the same hand, written on more elevated subjects and in a more cheerful disposition."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1799, ii. 210.

4. Poems, 1807, 2 vols. 12mo, pp. 320.

"Though the present work may not equal his former efforts, many of the poems possess a native elegance, natural and unaffected, totally devoid of the tinsel embellishments and abstract hyperboles of several contemporary sonneteers."—Lord Byron, (ætat. 19:) Mon. Lit. Recollec., Aug. 1807.

"There are certainly some pieces there which are good for nothing, (none, however, which a bad poet could have written,) and very many which it was highly injudicious to publish. . . . The sonnets are in a grand style."—Southey: Letter to Walter Scott, Dec. 8, 1807: Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xiii.

"Even in the worst of these productions there are, no doubt, occasional little traits of delicate feeling and original fancy; but these are quite lost and obscured in the mass of childishness and simplicity with which they are incorporated."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xi. 231.

"The article on Wordsworth [ut supra] very unjust and antipoetical. . . . The Sonnets on Switzerland and on Milton are sublime. Some of the others are in a style of severe simplicity sometimes bordering on the hardness and dryness of some of Milton's sonnets."—Sir J. Mackintosh: Journal, July 6, 1808: Life, i. ch. viii.

5. On the Relations of Great Britain, Spain, and Portugal to Each Other, 1809, 8vo. In favour of the vigorous prosecution of the Peninsular War.

"If Mr. Wordsworth had never written a single verse, this Essay alone would be sufficient to place him in the highest rank of English poets."—C. Wordsworth, D.D.: Mem. of W. Wordsworth, 1851.

"An earnest and eloquent production."—Austin and Ralph's Poets-Laureate, 1853, 414.

"The sentences are long and involved."—R. Southey: Life and Corresp., ch. xv.

"No half as gude as a leading paragraph in Jamie Ballantyne's Journal. The sense is waur, and sae is the wording."—The Shepherd, in Noctes Ambros., Oct. 1823: Blackw. Mag., xiv. 486.

It is highly praised in Fraser's Mag., Aug. 1850: not so in Lon. Quarterly. In this year (1809) he contributed an Essay on Epitaphs to Coleridge's Friend. See Lyra Memorialis, by J. Snow, new ed., 1847, 18mo.

6. The Excursion, being a Portion of the Recluse; a Poem, 1814, 4to, pp. 447: 500 copies; 2d ed., 1820, 8vo; new ed., 1844, fp. 8vo; N. As regards the early sale of The Excursion, see Milton, John, (p. 1302, quotation from Lord Byron.)

"This will never do. . . . It is longer, weaker, and tamer than any of Mr. Wordsworth's other productions; with less boldness of originality, and less even of that extreme simplicity and lowliness of tone which wavered so prettily, in the Lyrical Ballads, between silliness and pathos."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xxiv. 1: repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1843, &c., (q. v.)

"Jeffrey, I hear, has written what his admirers call a crushing review of The Excursion. He might as well seat himself upon Skiddaw and fancy that he crushed the mountain."—R. Southey: Life and Corresp., ch. xix.

"In power of intellect, in lofty conception, in the depth of feeling, at once simple and sublime, which pervades every part of it, and which gives to every object an almost preternatural and preterhuman interest, this work has seldom been surpassed."—Wm. Hazlitt: The Round Table: repub. in Appendix to vol. iv. of his Miscell. Works, Phila., 1848, 5 vols. 12mo.

"It affects a system without having any intelligible clue to one, and, instead of unfolding a principle in various and striking lights, repeats the same conclusions till they become flat and insipid. . . . There was something abortive, and clumsy, and ill-judged in the attempt. It was long and laboured. The personages, for the most part, were low, the fare rustic; the plan raised expectations which were not fulfilled."—Wm. Hazlitt: The Spirit of the Age: William Wordsworth: repub. in vol. v., ut supra.

"'The Excursion' is a series of poems, all swimming in the light of poetry; some of them sweet and simple; some elegant and graceful; some beautiful and most lovely; some of strength and state; some majestic; some magnificent; some sublime."—Professor Wilson: Recreations of Christopher North.

"North.—'Or Wordsworth, with his eternal, Here we go up, up, and up, and here we go down, down, and here round about, round about! Look at the nerveless laxity of his Excursion! What interminable prosing! The language is out of condition; fat and fozy, thick-winded, purfled, and plethoric. Can he be compared with Pope? Fie on't! no, no, no! Pugh, pugh!'"—Noctes Ambros., Mar. 1825: Blackw. Mag., xvii. 375. See, also, xii. 176, xiv. 486, xxiv. 925, xxvii. 146, xxx. 252, xxxvii. 705, xliv. 291, 512, 584.

"The views of man, nature, and society, which this truly philosophical poem contains, are the offspring of deep thought and extensive observation."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit.

"This, we think, has the merit of being the very worst poem we ever saw imprinted in a quarto volume. . . . In the Lyrical Ballads he was exhibited, on the whole, in a state of very pretty deliration; but in the poem before us he appears in a state of low and maudlin imbecility which would not have misbecome Master Silence himself, in the close of a social day."—Lord Jeffrey: *Edin. Censured by Hazlitt in Lect. VII. of his Lects. on the English Poets, and By a Friend of Robert Burns in Blackw. Mag., i. 261. "He [Lord Byron] now and then praised Mr. Wordsworth and Mr. Coleridge; but ungraciously, and without cordiality.

When he attacked them, he brought his whole soul to the work. Of the most elaborate of Mr. Wordsworth's poems [The Excursion] he could find nothing to say, but that it was 'clumsy, frowsy, and his aversion.' Peter Bell excited his spleen to such a degree, that he apostrophized the shades of Pope and Dryden, and demanded of them whether it were possible that such trash could evade contempt."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., liii. 563: repub. in his Essays.

In thanking the author for Peter Bell, Charles Lamb queried, "Why did you not add the Waggoner?" (He had heard Wordsworth read it from the MS. in 1806.) Thus encouraged, he gave to the world (with a dedication to Lamb)—12. The Waggoner; a Poem; to which are added Sonnets, 1819, 8vo.

"Mr. Wordsworth appears determined to try how far he can trample on the degraded poetry of his country. 'Keep it down,' seems to be his prevailing principle; and well may he add, 'now it is down.'"—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1819, iii. 36.

"Nobody, we are sure, who might have seen it [The Waggoner] published anonymously, would have suspected it to be a production of the Great Poet of the Lakes."—Blackw. Mag., v. 332.

It elicited Benjamin the Waggoner, a Ryghte Merrie and Conceitede Tale in Verse; a Fragment, 1819, 8vo.

The chaff is out of all proportion to the grains."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1822, 191, 192.

OPINIONS ON WORDSWORTH'S POETRY.

Let us hear first one of the most intimate of his poetical friends,—himself a man of high mark: he claims for Wordsworth, and commends in him,

"First: An austere purity of language, both grammatically and logically; in short, a perfect appropriateness of the words to the meaning. Secondly: A correspondent weight and sanity of the thoughts and sentiments, won, not from books, but from the poet's own meditations. They are fresh, and have the dew upon them. Even throughout his smaller poems there is not one which is not rendered valuable by some just and original reflection. Thirdly: The sinewy strength and originality of single lines and paragraphs; the frequent curiosa felicitas of his diction. Fourthly: The perfect truth of nature in his images and descriptions, as taken immediately from nature, and proving a long and genial intimacy with the very spirit which gives a physiognomic expression to all the works of nature. Fifthly: A meditative pathos, a union of deep and subtle thought with sensibility; a sympathy with man as man,—the sympathy, indeed, of a contemplator rather than a fellow-sufferer and co-mate, (spectator, haud particeps,) but of a contemplator from whose view no difference of rank conceals the sameness of the nature; no injuries of wind or weather or toil, or even of ignorance, wholly disguise the human face divine. Last, and preëminently, I challenge for this poet the gift of imagination in the highest and strictest sense of the word. In the play of fancy, Wordsworth, to my feelings, is always graceful, and sometimes recondite. The likeness is occasionally too strange, or demands too peculiar a point of view, or is such as appears the creature of predetermined research rather than spontaneous presentation. Indeed, his fancy seldom displays itself as mere and unmodified fancy. But in imaginative power he stands nearest of all modern writers to Shakspeare and Milton, and yet in a mind perfectly unborrowed and his own. To employ his own words, which are at once an instance and an illustration, he does indeed to all thoughts and to all objects

"'Add the gleam,
The light that never was on sea or land,
The consecration, and the poet's dream.'"

COLERIDGE: Biographia Literaria.

"I think that Wordsworth possessed more of the genius of a great philosophic poet than any man I ever knew, or I believe has existed in England since Milton; but it seems to me that he ought never to have abandoned the contemplative position which is peculiarly—perhaps I might say exclusively—fitted for him. His proper title is 'Spectator ab extra.'"—COLERIDGE.

"Had Mr. Wordsworth's poems been the silly, the childish things which they were for a long time described as being; had they been really distinguished from the compositions of other poets merely by meanness of language and inanity of thought; had they indeed contained nothing more than what is found in the parodies and pretended imitations of them; they must have sunk at once, a dead weight, into the slough of oblivion and have dragged the preface [to his Lyrical Ballads] along with them. But year after year increased the number of Mr. Wordsworth's admirers. They were found, too, not in the lower classes of the reading public, but chiefly among young men of strong sensibility and meditative minds; and their admiration (inflamed perhaps in some degree by opposition) was distinguished by its intensity. I might almost say by its religious fervour."—COLERIDGE: Biog. Lit., ch. xiv.

"And first—in the great walk of poesy—is Wordsworth, who, if he stood alone, would vindicate the immortality of his art. He has, in his works, built up a rock of defence for his species, which will resist the mightiest tides of demoralizing luxury. Setting aside the varied and majestic harmony of his verse—the freshness and the grandeur of his descriptions—the exquisite softness of his delineations of character—and the high and rapturous spirit of his choral songs—we may produce his 'divine philosophy' as unequalled by any preceding bard. And surely it is no small proof of the infinity of the resources of genius, that, in this late age of the world, the first of all philosophic poets should have arisen, to open a new vein of sentiment and thought, deeper and richer than yet had been laid bare to mortal eyes. His rural pictures are as fresh and lively as those of Cowper, yet how much lovelier is the poetic light which is shed over them! His exhibition of gentle peculiarities of character and clear immunities of heart is as true and genial as that of Goldsmith, yet how much is its interest heightened by its intimate connection, as by golden chords, with the noblest and most universal truths! His little pieces of tranquil beauty are as holy and as sweet as those of Collins; and yet, while we feel the calm of the elder poet gliding into our souls, we catch farther glimpses through the luxuriant boughs into 'the highest heaven of invention.' His soul mantles as high with love and joy as that of Burns; but yet how bright, how solemn, how serene, is the brimming and lucid stream! His poetry not only discovers within the heart new faculties, but awakens within its untried powers to comprehend and enjoy its beauty and its wisdom."—SIR T. N. TALFOURD: Lon. Retros. Rev., ii. (1820) 197; repub. in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings, where see, also, The Genius and Writings of Wordsworth, (from New Month. Mag.) And see Talfourd's Speech on the Law of Copyright in House of Commons, May 18, 1837; N. Brit. Rev., May, 1856, art. ii., (Life and Writings of the Late Mr. Justice Talfourd;) and TALFOURD, SIR THOMAS NOON, Knt., D.C.L., No. 2.

"For our own parts, we believe that Wordsworth's genius has had a greater influence on the spirit of poetry in Britain than was ever before exercised by any individual mind. He was the first man who impregnated all his descriptions of external nature with sentiment and passion. In this he has been followed —often successfully—by other true poets. He was the first man that vindicated the native dignity of human nature, by showing that all her elementary feelings were capable of poetry; and in that, too, he has been followed by other true poets; although here he stands, and probably ever will stand, unapproached. He was the first man that stripped thought and passion of all vain or foolish disguises and showed them in their just proportions and unencumbered power. He was the first man who in poetry knew the real province of language, and suffered it not to veil the meanings of the spirit. In all these things—and in many more—Wordsworth is indisputably the most ORIGINAL POET OF THE AGE; and it is impossible, in the very nature of things, that he ever can be eclipsed. From his golden urn other orbs may draw light; but still it will be said of him—

"'Then shone the firmament
With living sapphires. HESPERUS, WHO LED
THE STARRY HOST, SHONE BRIGHTEST'—

Accordingly, what living poet is not indebted to Wordsworth?" —PROF. WILSON: Blackw. Mag., xii. (Aug. 1822) 175; repub., with other extracts from Blackw. Mag. on Wordsworth, in Wilson's Essays, i. (1856) 387–408. See, also, his Essays, ii. 29, 66, and iii. (1857) 334.

"Of all the great living poets, Wordsworth is the one whose poetry is to us the most inexplicable—with all our reverence for his transcendent genius, we do not fear to say, the most open to the most serious charges—on the score of its religion. . . . In none of Wordsworth's poetry, previous to his Excursion, is there any allusion made, except of the most trivial and transient kind, to Revealed Religion. He certainly cannot be called a Christian poet. . . . In the Excursion his religion is brought forward prominently and conspicuously—in many elaborate dialogues between Priest, Pedlar, Poet, and Solitary. And a very high religion it often is—emanating from a mind like Wordsworth's, framed 'in the prodigality of Heaven.' But is it Christianity? No; it is not."—PROFESSOR WILSON: Blackw. Mag., xxiv. 925: Sacred Poetry: repub. in Recreations of Christopher North.

"Wordsworth will . . . leave behind him a name unique in his way. He will rank among the very first poets, and probably possesses a mass of merits superior to all, except only Shakspeare, [1804.] . . . My mind is wholly unlike Milton's, and my poetry has nothing of his imagination and distinguishing character; nor is there any poet who has, except Wordsworth: he possesses it in an equal degree. And it is entirely improbable that any man can understand Milton and fail to perceive that Wordsworth is a poet of the same class and of eqnal powers, [1815.] . . . It is by the side of Milton that Wordsworth will have his station awarded him by posterity, [1816.] . . . A greater poet than Wordsworth there never has been, nor ever will be. I could point out some of his pieces which seem to me good for nothing, and not a few faulty passages; but I know of no poet in any language who has written so much that is good, [1829.] A clear half of what he has written will remain. Who can say how much of the rest of us will survive? [1836.]"—SOUTHEY: Life and Corresp., ch. x., xix., xx., xxxii., xxxvi. See, also, ix., xi., xii., xiii., xv., xxvi.

"Both Coleridge and Wordsworth, powerfully as they can write, and profoundly as they usually think, have been betrayed into the same fault,—that of making things easy of comprehension in themselves, difficult to be comprehended by their way of stating them. Instead of going to the natural springs for water, they seem to like the labour of digging wells."—SOUTHEY.

"Not that I think the amiable bard of Rydal shows judgment in choosing such subjects as the popular mind cannot sympathize in. It is unwise and unjust to himself. I do not compare myself, in point of imagination, with Wordsworth; far from it: for he is naturally exquisite, and highly cultivated from constant exercise, [1827.]"—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Lockhart's Scott, ch. lxxiii.

Sir Walter wonders "why Wordsworth will sometimes choose to crawl upon all-fours, when God has given him so noble a countenance to lift to heaven."

"Mr. Wordsworth is the most original poet now living. He is the reverse of Walter Scott in all his defects and excellences. He has nearly all that the other wants, and wants all that the other possesses. His poetry is not external, but internal; it does not depend upon tradition, or story, or old song; he furnishes it from his own mind, and is his own subject. He is the poet of mere sentiment. Of many of the Lyrical Ballads it is not possible to speak in terms of too high praise; such as Heart Leap Well, The Banks of the Wye, Poor Susan, parts of The Leech Gatherer, the Lines to a Cuckoo, To a Daisy, The Complaint, several of the Sonnets, and a hundred others of inconceivable beauty, of perfect originality and pathos. They open a finer and deeper vein of thought and feeling than any poet in modern times has done or attempted. He has produced a deeper impression, and on a smaller circle, than any other of his contemporaries. His powers have been mistaken by the age, nor does he exactly understand them himself. He cannot form a whole. He has not the constructive faculty. He can give only the fine tones of thought, drawn from his mind by accident or nature, like the sounds drawn from the Æolian harp by the wandering gale. He is totally deficient in all the machinery of poetry."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VIII.

See, also, his Spirit of the Age, his Table-Talk, and MILTON, JOHN, (p. 1303, quotation from Hazlitt.)

"But the great distinction of Wordsworth, and the pledge of his increasing popularity, is the extent of his sympathy with what is really permanent in human feelings, and also the depth of this sympathy. . . . In poetry of this class, which appeals to what lies deepest in man, in proportion to the native power of the poet, and his fitness for permanent life, is the strength of resistance in the public taste. Whatever is too original will be hated at the first. It must slowly mould a public for itself; and the resistance of the early thoughtless judgments must be overcome by a counter-resistance to itself, in a better audience slowly mustering against the first. Forty-and-seven years it is since William Wordsworth first appeared as an author. Twenty of those years he was the scoff of the world, and his poetry a by-word of scorn. Since then, and more than once, senates have rung with acclamations to the echo of his name. Now, at this moment, whilst we are talking about him, he has entered upon his seventy-sixth year. For himself, according to the course of nature, he cannot be far from his setting; but his poetry is but now clearing the clouds that gathered about its rising. Meditative poetry is perhaps that which will finally maintain most power upon generations more thoughtful; and in this department, at least, there is little competition to be apprehended by Wordsworth from any thing that has appeared since the death of Shakspeare."—De Quincey: Essays on the Poets: On Wordsworth's Poetry.

See, also, his Lit. Reminis., (William Wordsworth; Samuel Taylor Coleridge,) and his Philos. Writers, (Dr. Parr.)

An eminent authority, after taking to task some critics of the time, remarks,

"At quibus ego te vocibus compellem, vir, civis, philosophe, poeta, præstantissime, qui sæculum nostrum ut nullo priore minus gloriosum sit effeceris; quem nec domicilium longinquum, nec vita sanctissima, neque optimorum voluntas, charitas, propensio, neque hominum fere universorum reverentia, inviolatum conservavit; cujus sepulchrum, si mortuus esses antea-quam nascerentur, ut voti rei inviserent, et laudi sibi magnæ ducerent vel aspici vel credi ibidem ingemiscere."—Walter Savage Landor: De Cultu atque Usu Latini Sermonis, Pisis, 1820. 215.

"We must now descend to Wordsworth again. He often gave an opinion on authors which he never had read, and on some which he could not read; Plato, for instance. . . . He spoke contemptuously of the Scotch. The first time I ever met him, and the only time I ever conversed with him longer than a few minutes, he spoke contemptuously of Scott, and violently of Byron. He chattered about them incoherently and indiscriminately. . . . This induced me, when, at breakfast where many were present, he said he 'would not give five shillings for all Southey's poetry,' to tell a friend of his that he might safely make such an investment of his money and throw all his own in."—Walter Savage Landor: Letter to R. W. Emerson, 1856.

This letter was elicited by some comments on Landor in Emerson's English Traits, in which volume the author gives us an account of his visits to Wordsworth in 1833 and 1848. Of his poetry he remarks, inter alia,

"He had no masters but nature and solitude. 'He wrote a poem,' says Landor, 'without the aid of war.' His voice is the voice of sanity in a worldly and ambitious age. One regrets that his temperament was not more liquid and musical. He has written longer than he was inspired. But, for the rest, he has no competitor. . . . His 'Ode on Immortality' is the high-water mark which the intellect has reached in this age. New means were employed, and new realms added to the empire of the Muse, by his courage."—English Traits. See, also, Tennyson, Alfred, D.C.L., quotation from Emerson.

A late Oxford Professor of Poetry speaks of Wordsworth as one

"Cui illud munus tribuit Deus Opt. Max. ut, sive hominum affectus caneret, sive terrarum et cœli pulchritudinem, legentium animos, semper ad sanctiora erigeret, semper a pauperum et simpliciorum partibus staret, atque adeo, labente sæculo, existeret non solum dulcissimæ Poeseus, verum etiam divinæ Veritatis antistes."—Rev. John Keble: Prælectiones Academicæ Oxon. Habitæ, 1838–41, 2 vols. 8vo, 1844: Inscription to Wordsworth.

Wordsworth was pleased with this Inscription,—especially with "ad sanctiora erigeret."

> ——— "the laurel greener from the brows
> Of him who uttered nothing base."

> Tennyson: Dedication to Her Majesty.

"The last time I saw Mr. Wordsworth," remarks one of his friends, "he was in deep domestic sorrow, and beginning to bend under the infirmities of old age. 'Whatever,' he said, 'the world may think of me or of my poetry is now of little consequence; but one thing is a comfort of my old age, that none of my works, written since the days of my early youth, contains a line I should wish to blot out because it panders to the baser passions of our nature. This,' said he, 'is a comfort to me; I can do no mischief by my works when I am gone.'"

Referring to Keble, we pause long enough to record the fact that Keble College, Oxford University, was opened June 23, 1870, Rev. Dr. E. B. Pusey, and Gathorne Hardy, M.P. for Oxford, officiating in the inaugural ceremonies.

"Wordsworth is the poet of nature and man,—not of humble life, as some have said, but of noble emotions, lofty feelings, and whatever tends to exalt man and elevate him on the table-land of honour, morality, and religion. His style is worthy of his topics,—simple, unaffected, and vigorous: he occasionally becomes too minute in his delineations, and some of the subjects which he treats of are too homely for inspiration. His poetry is making its way, as true feeling and impassioned thought ever will, [1833.]"—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of Lit.

"His 'Cumberland Beggar,' 'Tintern Abbey,' and 'Lines on the Naming of Places,' unpromising as the subjects might appear at first sight, with many other of his profound and curious speculations, have taught us new sympathies, the existence of which in human nature had scarcely been intimated by any poet before him. In these, his most successful efforts, he has attired, in diction of the most transcendent beauty, thoughts the most recondite, and imaginations the most subtle."—James Montgomery: Lects. on Gen. Lit., Poetry, &c., Lect. IV.

"We do not want Mr. Wordsworth to write like Pope or Prior, nor to dedicate his muse to subjects which he does not himself think interesting. We are prepared, on the contrary, to listen with a far deeper delight to the songs of his mountain solitude, and to gaze on his mellow pictures of simple happiness and affection, and his lofty sketches of human worth and energy; and we only beg that we may have these noble elements of his poetry, without the debasement of childish language, mean incidents, and incongruous images."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xix. (Feb. 1812) 375. See, also, Blackw. Mag., xx. 547 and xxiv. 694.

In republishing his Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, in 1843, Lord Jeffrey remarks,

"I have spoken in many places rather too bitterly and confidently of the faults of Mr. Wordsworth's poetry, and, forgetting that, even in my own view of them, they were but faults of taste or venial self-partiality, have sometimes visited them, I fear, with an asperity which should be reserved for objects of moral reprobation. . . . I still retain, in substance, the opinions which I should now like to have seen more gently expressed. . . . I finally resolved, therefore, to reprint my review of 'The Excursion.' . . . I have also reprinted a short paper on the same author's 'White Doe of Rylstone.'"—Note to reprint of review of The Excursion. See conclusion of our article.

"A holy calm is shed over his writings, whose general purpose seems to be to reconcile man with himself and his destiny, by furnishing him with a key to the mysteries of his present condition. Wordsworth's soul is instinct with such a pure love of nature, so much simplicity, or, as the French call it, loyalty, of purpose, that, had he not entangled himself in an unlucky theory, he might have shared the popularity of Cowper, whom he must be permitted to surpass in the general elevation, as well as the benevolence, of his sentiments. As it is, there are few who read, and fewer still who relish, him."—William H. Prescott, the historian: N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. (July, 1832) 174.

> "Kindred in soul of him who found
> In simple flower and leaf and stone
> The impulse of the sweetest lays
> Our Saxon tongue has known:
> The violet by its mossy stone,
> The primrose by the river's brim,
> And chance-sown daffodil, have found
> Immortal life through him."—Whittier.

"In the Lyrical Ballads and The Excursion Mr. Wordsworth appeared as the high-priest of a worship of which Nature was the idol. No poems have ever indicated so exquisite a perception of the beauty of the outer world, or so passionate a love and reverence for that beauty. Yet they were not popular, and it is not likely that they ever will be popular as the works of Sir Walter Scott are popular. The feeling which pervaded them was too deep for general sympathy. Their style was often too mysterious for general comprehension. They made a few esoteric disciples and many scoffers. Lord Byron founded what may be called an esoteric Lake school of poetry, and all the readers of poetry in England—we might say in Europe—hastened to sit at his feet. What Mr. Wordsworth had said like a recluse, Lord Byron said like a man of the world,—with less profound feeling, but with more perspicuity, energy, and conciseness. We would refer our readers to the last two cantos of Childe Harold and to Manfred, in proof of these observations. Lord Byron, like Mr. Wordsworth, had nothing dramatic in his genius. . . . In spite of the reverence which we feel for the genius of Mr. Wordsworth, we cannot but think that the minuteness of his descriptions often diminishes their effect. He has accustomed himself to gaze on nature with the eye of a lover,—to dwell on every feature, and to mark every change of aspect. Those beauties which strike the most negligent observer, and those which only a close attention discovers, are equally familiar to him, and are equally prominent in his poetry."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., liii. (June, 1831) 565, 568: Moore's Life of Lord Byron, repub. in Macaulay's Essays.

"Little attended to as works of that stamp generally are in the outset, they gradually, but unceasingly, rose in public estimation; they took a lasting hold of the highly-educated youth of the next generation; and he now numbers among his devout worshippers many of the ablest men, profound thinkers, and most accomplished and discriminating women, of the age. Indeed, great numbers of persons whose mental powers, cultivated taste, and extensive acquirements entitle their opinion to the very highest consideration, yield him an admiration approaching to idolatry, and assign him a place second only to Milton in English poetry. He is regarded by them in much the same light that Goethe is by the admiring and impassioned multitude of the Fatherland."—Sir Archibald Alison: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, i. ch. v. See, also, his Essays, 1850, ii. 425.

"The works of genius of our age breathe a spirit of universal sympathy. The great poet of our times, Wordsworth,—one of the few who are to live,—has gone to common life, to the feelings of our universal nature, to the obscure and neglected portions of society, for beautiful and touching themes. Nor ought it to be said that he has shed over these the charms of his genius, as if in themselves they had nothing grand or lovely. Genius is not a creator, in the sense of fancying or feigning what does not exist. Its distinction is to discern more of truth than common minds. It sees under disguises and humble forms everlasting beauty. This it is the prerogative of Wordsworth to discern and reveal in the ordinary walks of life, in the common human heart. He has revealed the loveliness of the primitive feelings, of the universal affections, of the human soul. The grand truth which pervades his poetry is that the beautiful is not confined to the rare, the new, the distant,—to scenery and modes of life open only to the few,—but that it is poured forth profusely on the common earth and sky, that it gleams from the loneliest flower, that it lights up the humblest sphere, that the sweetest affections lodge in lowly hearts, that there is sacredness, dignity, and loveliness in lives which few eyes rest on,—that, even in the absence of all intellectual culture, the domestic relations can quietly nourish that disinterestedness which is the element of all greatness, and without which intellectual power is a splendid deformity. Wordsworth is the poet of humanity; he teaches reverence for our universal nature; he breaks down the factitious barriers between human hearts.

"The same is true in an inferior degree of Scott, whose tastes, however, were more aristocratic. Scott had a childish love of rank, titles, show, pageants, and, in general, looked with keener eye on the outward life than into the soul. Still, he had a human heart, and sympathized with his race. With few exceptions, he was just to all his human brethren. A reconciling spirit breathes through his writings. He seizes on the interesting and beautiful features in all conditions of life, gives us bursts of tender and noble feelings even from rude natures, and continually knits some new tie between the reader and the vast varieties of human nature which start up under his teeming pen. He delighted, indeed, in Highland chiefs, in border thieves and murderers, in fierce men and fierce encounters. But he had an eye to catch the stream of sweet affections as it wound its way through humble life. What light has Jeanie Deans shed on the path of the obscure! He was too wanting in the religious sentiment to comprehend the solemn bearing, the stern grandeur, of the Puritans. But we must not charge with narrowness a writer who embodied in a Jewish maiden his highest conceptions of female nobleness.

"Another writer illustrating the liberalizing, all-harmonizing tendency of our times is Dickens, whose genius has sought and found subjects of thrilling interest in the passions, sufferings, virtues, of the mass of the people. He shows that life in its rudest forms may wear a tragic grandeur; that amidst follies and sensual excesses, provoking laughter or scorn, the moral feelings do not wholly die; and that the haunts of the blackest crimes are sometimes lighted up by the presence and influence of the noblest souls. He has, indeed, greatly erred in turning so often the degradation of humanity into matter of sport; but the tendency of his dark pictures is to awaken sympathy with our race, to change the unfeeling indifference which has prevailed towards the depressed multitude into sorrowful and indignant sensibility to their wrongs and woes."—WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING, D.D.: Address before the Mercantile Library Company of Philadelphia, May 11, 1841: Complete Works, Lon., 1870, p. 8vo, 133.

"Wordsworth was about five feet ten inches in height. His figure was not graceful, but in his countenance there was a fine mixture of the poet and philosopher. He resembled the portraits of Locke; his eyes burned with an inward glare, and looked as if they saw things (which they did) in nature not revealed to ordinary vision. His manners were grave and rather austere; but never, even when his poetical fortunes were at their lowest ebb, was he, in the smallest degree, a soured or disappointed man; for nature had given him a sanguine temperament, equable, indeed elastic, spirits; and he had moreover an unshaken faith in the genuineness of his own genius, and a correct appreciation of the value of his own writings, which he was sure would be finally rated at their proper worth, whatever vicissitudes they might meanwhile undergo. These vicissitudes are well summed up by De Quincey, who says, 'From 1800 to 1820 the poetry of Wordsworth was trodden under foot, from 1820 to 1830 it was militant, from 1830 and onwards it has been triumphant.' It must be remembered, however, that he had from the first a select fraternity of admirers who looked up to him as the very high-priest of nature.

"With regard to the poems themselves of Wordsworth there is but room for this single remark, that of these poems it may perhaps be said, with greater truth than of any other modern poetry, that they contain passages and lines so startling in their simplicity, subtlety, and freshness that the perusal of them forms an epoch in the intellectual life of every student of sensibility and taste. When first read they are felt to be unlike any thing in poetry which the reader has ever met with before. As an instance of this spell-like originality, take the two last lines of the following stanza—

> 'The stars of midnight shall be dear
> To her; and she shall lean her ear
> In many a secret place
> Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
> And beauty born of murmuring sound
> Shall pass into her face!"

JOHN FRANCIS WALLER, LL.D.: Imp. Dict. of Univ. Biog., vi. (1866) 1389.

"Wordsworth eut plus d'originalité dans le caractère que dans le génie, et peut-être est-il plus grand comme homme que comme poëte. On ne peut donner trop d'éloges à la haute et pure moralité de ses œuvres; mais on ne saurait approuver sans réserve ni le genre qu'il choisit ni la manière dont il le traita. Il y a trop de prose dans sa poésie, c'est-à-dire trop d'éléments que l'imagination et les agréments de la versification ne peuvent vivifier et embellir. Ce défaut, qui se sent à peine dans ses courtes pièces lyriques, n'est que trop visible dans ses pièces de longue haleine, où les passages exquis sont coupés par des espaces arides, ternis, qui fatiguent et rebutent. Aussi Wordsworth n'a-t-il jamais obtenu ni le plein assentiment des esprits difficiles ni l'admiration du grand nombre; lui le poëte da la vie commune, il n'a pas été populaire. Il a eu cependant une influence réelle. L'école des lacs, ou lakiste, dont il était le chef et à laquelle on rattacha Coleridge, Southey et quelques autres, a laissé son empreinte sur la poésie anglaise contemporaine. A l'étranger, en France, en Allemagne, elle n'a pas été tout-à-fait éclipsée, même par l'éclat supérieur de la poésie de Byron. Ce genre (la poésie de la vie humble et moyenne) a tenté un de nos écrivains les plus distingués, M. Sainte-Beuve, qui y a assez réussi pour montrer ce qu'il aurait pu faire, s'il n'avait trouvé dans la critique un plus facile et plus brillant emploi de son talent. Sur ce genre poétique, sur Wordsworth lui-même, ce serait trop peut-être que de vouloir dès à présent porter un jugement définitif. La postérité fera son choix plus ou moins sévère parmi les nombreuses productions du grand solitaire de Rydal-Mount, et ce qu'elle conservera de lui suffira pour honorer la mémoire de ce poëte, d'une intelligence si pure et d'un si noble caractère." —Nouv. Biog. Gén., Paris, Didot, xlvi. (1866) 834.

"August 17th, [1837.]—I breakfasted with Rogers this morning. Empson went with me. Wordsworth there. A very interesting chat with him about his poetry. He repeated emphatically what he had said to me before,—that he did not expect or desire from posterity any other fame than that which would be given him for the way in which his poems exhibit man in his essentially human character and relations,—as child, parent, husband,—the qualities which are common to all men, as opposed to those which distinguish one man from another.

His Sonnets are not, therefore, the works that he esteems the most. Empson and I had spoken of the Sonnets as our favourites. He said, 'You are both wrong.' Rogers, however, attacked the form of the Sonnet with exaggeration, that he might be less offensive. I regret my inability to record more of Wordsworth's conversation. Empson related that Jeffrey had lately told him that so many people had thought highly of Wordsworth, that he was resolved to re-peruse his poems, and see if he had any thing to retract. Empson, I believe, did not end his anecdote; he had before said to me that Jeffrey, having done so, found nothing to retract, except, perhaps, a contemptuous or flippant phrase or two. Empson says he believed Jeffrey's distaste for Wordsworth to be honest,—mere uncongeniality of mind. Talfourd, who is now going to pay Jeffrey a visit, says the same. Jeffrey does acknowledge that he was wrong in his treatment of Lamb."—Diary, &c. of Henry Crabbe Robinson, ed. Bost., 1870, ii. 257.

"Wordsworth and Dickens did not take to each other. Indeed, there was a mutual contempt between them, though they met only once. This was about 1843. Some days after, the gentleman whose guest Wordsworth was, in the suburbs of London, asked the Poet how he liked the great Novelist. Wordsworth had a great contempt for young men, and, after pursing up his lips in a manner peculiar to him, and swinging one leg over the other, the bare flesh of his ankles appearing over his socks, slowly answered, 'Why, I am not much given to turn critic on people I meet; but, as you ask me, I will candidly avow that I thought him a very talkative, vulgar young person—but I dare say he may be very clever. Mind, I don't want to say a word against him, for I have never read a line that he has written.' Some time after this, the same querist guardedly asked Dickens how he had liked the Poet-Laureate. 'Like him? Not at all. He is a dreadful old ass.' In short, the two authors did not assimilate at all."—Life of Charles Dickens, by R. Shelton Mackenzie, LL.D., Phila., 1870, 12mo.

2. Museum Worsleyanum; or, A Collection of Antique Basso Relievos, Bustos, Statues, and Gems; with Views of Places in the Levant, taken on the Spot, in the Years 1785–6–7, with portrait and more than 150 plates, Lon., Bulmer, printer, 1794–1803, 2 vols. imp. fol. Text in English and Italian. E. Q. Visconti assisted in the text, as well as in the arrangement of the collection. Some copies have a letter of the University of Cambridge to Sir R. Worsley, July 3, 1799, (it was printed on paper and also on vellum,) prefixed or appended to vol. i. The cost, including expenses of travel, to the author was estimated at £27,000.

"Il paraît que le texte de ce Muséum a été tiré à 250 exemplaires, (Dibdin et Lowndes disent seulement 200 exemplaires pour le premier vol. et 100 pour le second,) mais que l'auteur ne compléta d'abord que 50 exemplaires de son premier volume, ainsi qu'il écrivait lui-même dans sa lettre d'envoi au Chevalier d'Azara, en date du 16 juillet, 1804. Ces exemplaires réservés pour des cadeaux n'entrèrent pas alors dans le commerce, ce qui fit porter à 100 guinées et plus ceux qui, par hasard, passèrent dans des ventes avant la mort du chevalier. Depuis, d'autres exemplaires furent complétés et livrés au public, en sorte qu'on put se les procurer pour 40 et bientôt pour moins de 20 liv. sterl., avant même que la nouvelle édition fut publiée."—BRUNET: Manuel, 5th ed., v. (1864) 1478.

"The first volume . . . was finished in May, 1793, and circulated, with the plates only of vol. ii., amongst the chosen friends of Sir Richard Worsley. . . . From the irregularity of delivering the second volume of plates, in the first instance, without the letter-press, many of the copies are incomplete."—DIBDIN: Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 532, n.

"The poetry of Wotton, though chiefly written for the amusement of his leisure, and through the excitement of casual circumstances, possesses the invaluable attractions of energy, simplicity, and the most touching morality; it comes warm from the heart, and, whether employed on an amatory or didactic subject, makes its appropriate impression with an air of sincerity which never fails to delight. Of this description are the pieces entitled 'A Farewell to the Vanities of the World,' the 'Character of a Happy Life,' and the Lines on the Queen of Bohemia. One of his earliest pieces, being 'written in his youth,' was printed in Davison's 'Poetical Rhapsody,' 1602."—Dr. Drake: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 672.

Wotton, Thomas, Master of the Company of Stationers, 1757, d. 1766. The English Baronetage, printed for Thomas Wotton, Lon., 1727, 3 vols. 12mo: new ed., 1741, 4 vols. in 5, 8vo, with plates of arms, £2 2*s*. Excellent. Said to be by Arthur Collins, (supra;) but in the account of Wotton in Nichols's Lit. Anec., iii. 440, the whole credit of both editions is assigned to the latter.

Wotton, William, D.D., b. at Wrentham, Suffolk, August 13, 1666, already referred to under Wotton, Henry, (supra,) is perhaps the most remarkable of well-authenticated cases of intellectual precocity. When five years of age, he translated chapters and psalms from Hebrew, Greek, and Latin into English; in his tenth year he was admitted of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, and Dr. John Eachard, Master of the College, declared that "Gulielmus Wottonus, infra decem annos, nec Hammondo nec Grotio secundus," (April 1, 1676;) at twelve years of age his skill in Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Chaldee, Greek, and Latin, arts and sciences, geography, logic, philosophy, mathematics, and chronology, was celebrated in an elegant copy of verses (In Gulielmum Wottonum stupendi ingenii et incomparabilis spei puerum vixdum duodecim annorum) by the learned Dr. James Duport, Master of Magdalene College and Dean of Peterborough; when twelve years and five months old, (in Jan. 1679,) then being acquainted with twelve languages, he was made Bachelor of Arts,—a case unparalleled before or since, (see copies of the contemporaneous attestations to his learning in Nichols's Lit. Anec., iv. 253–60;) in the next winter, at the invitation of Gilbert (afterwards Bishop) Burnet, was brought to London, where he was introduced to the learned, and astonished Dr. Lloyd, the Bishop of St. Asaph, (he often accomplished similar feats,) by repeating verbatim one of his lordship's sermons after one hearing from the pulpit; in 1683 took the degree of M.A., and in 1685, at nineteen, became a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge; in 1691 commenced B.D.; in the same year was presented to the sinecure living of Llandrillo, Denbighshire, and soon after became chaplain to the Earl of Nottingham, who, in 1693, gave him the rectory of Middleton Keynes, Buckinghamshire; Prebendary of Salisbury, 1705; in 1714, in consequence of the embarrassed condition of his affairs, retired to Wales, and after his return preached a sermon before the British Society in Welsh,—no ordinary achievement; d. at Buxted, Essex, Feb. 13, 1726.

Occasioned by the controversy between Perrault, in his Parallèle des Anciens et des Modernes, Paris, 1688–92, 4 Parts, 12mo, (also 1693, 2 vols. 12mo,) and Sir William Temple, in his Essay on Ancient and Modern Learning, (in his Miscellanea, Lon., 1689–90, 2 Parts, 8vo.) 2d ed., with a Dissertation upon the Epistles of Phalaris, Themistocles, Socrates, Euripides, &c., and Æsop's Fables, (by Bentley, Richard, D.D., q. v., pp. 170, 172,) 1697, 8vo, (the additions were pub. separately, 1697, 8vo, for the subscribers to the first edition;) 3d ed., to which is added a Defence thereof, (see No. 3, infra,) 1705, 8vo; 1797, 8vo. Add to this, Essay concerning Critical and Curious Learning, in which are contained Reflections on the Controversie betwixt Sir William Temple and Mr. Wotton, and that betwixt Dr. Bentley and Mr. Boyle, by T. R., 1698, 12mo. See, also, Lord Macaulay's article on Sir William Temple, in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838, (repub. in his Essays,) and his Life of Atterbury, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., iii., 1854, 187.

"The cause of antiquity, so rudely assailed abroad by Perrault and Fontenelle, found support in Sir William Temple, who has defended it in one of his essays with more zeal than prudence or knowledge of the various subjects on which he contends for the rights of the past. It was, in fact, such a credulous and superficial view as might have been taken by a pedant of the sixteenth century. For it is in science, taking the word largely, full as much as in works of genius, that he denies the ancients to have been surpassed. Temple's essay, however, was translated into French, and he was supposed by many to have made a brilliant vindication of injured antiquity. But it was soon refuted in the most solid book that was written in any country upon this famous dispute.

"William Wotton published in 1694 his Reflections on Ancient and Modern Learning. He draws very well in this the line between Temple and Perrault, avoiding the tasteless judgment of the latter in poetry and eloquence, but pointing out the superiority of the moderns in the whole range of physical science."—HALLAM: *Lit. Wraxall was found guilty of a Libel (in his Historical Memoirs) on Count Woronzow, and sentenced to six (he suffered about three) months' imprisonment, and a fine of £500. Wraxall replied to some of his critics in: I. An Answer to the Calumnious Misrepresentations of the Quarterly Review, the British Critic, and the Edinburgh Review, contained in their Observations on Sir N. W. Wraxall's Historical Memoirs of his Own Time, 1815, 8vo. II. A Second Answer to the Calumnious Attacks of the Edinburgh Review, 1816, 8vo. "This is a continuation of a work which we reviewed in 1815, and the observations we then felt it a duty to make on the general style and character of Sir Nathaniel Wraxall's memoirs are equally applicable to the present volumes. . . . With these general testimonies from contemporaries, . . . we think we might flatter ourselves that we have deprived Wraxall's literary character of all confidence or respect, and his Memoirs of all historical authority."—J. W. Croker: Lon. Quar. Rev., lvii. 444, 486.

"The posthumous volumes now before us are much in the style of the former ones, with perhaps more erroneous references, and certainly with many unfair and extravagant suggestions relating to the political conduct of men who were neither guilty of corruption on the one hand nor of petty intrigues on the other."—*Lon. Wright, Thomas, an eminent engraver, b. at Birmingham, 1792, resided in Russia, 1822–26, and 1830–45; d. in London, 1849. During his second visit to Russia he brought out Les Contemporains Russes, a series of portraits engraved and published by himself of Living Public Characters of that country. He left in MS. translations of poems and prose pieces from the Russian. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1849, ii. 211, (Obituary.)

Wright, Thomas, one of the most eminent of modern antiquaries, b. April 21, 1810, in the vicinity of Ludlow, a town on the borders of Shropshire and Herefordshire, received his early education at the Grammar-School of King Edward VI. in that town, and afterwards studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1834 and of M.A. in 1837. Whilst yet an under-graduate, he was a zealous explorer of the valuable historical MSS. preserved in the libraries of the University, and from time to time communicated the results of his investigations to the pages of The Foreign Quarterly Review, The Gentleman's Magazine, Fraser's Magazine, The Literary Gazette, &c. These articles contributed largely towards laying the foundation of the more recent popularity of antiquarian studies, and of the more correct principles on which they have been pursued. Adopting the profession of a man of letters, in 1835 Mr. Wright removed to London, where—with the exception of the time devoted to tours of observation and superintendence of archæological explorations—he has ever since resided. Shortly after his arrival in London he was introduced to Monsieur Guizot, who appointed him a corresponding member of the Committee charged by the French Government with the publication of documents connected with the History of France; and in 1842 (on the death of the Earl of Munster) he was elected a corresponding member of the Institute of France, (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres,) when it was stated that he was the youngest person who had received that honour. He was one of the founders of The Camden Society in 1838, and of the Percy Society (of which he was for some time treasurer and secretary) and Shakespeare Society in 1840; and in 1843, in conjunction with Charles Roach Smith, (supra,) he founded The British Archæological Association,—the Journal and other publications of which he edited until 1850, when he withdrew. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, to whose Archæologia he has been a frequent contributor, and a member of many learned societies at home and abroad. In 1853–54 he edited a new series of The Retrospective Review, (Series I., 1820–26, 14 vols. 8vo, Series II., 1827–28, 2 vols. 8vo,) which only reached two volumes. He has contributed papers to Edin Rev., New Month. Mag., Ainsworth's Mag., Macmillan's Mag., Athenæum, Art Journal, and Intellectual Observer, in addition to the periodicals already cited. Nor should we omit to state that the annual Archæological Congresses held at different places in England were originated at Canterbury in 1844 by his exertions.

"Exhibiting to the end a sufficient variety of subjects, although we cannot say much for the value of the information."—Lon. Athen., 1846, 243.

34. Songs and Carols, now first Printed, from a Manuscript of the 15th Century, 1847, p. 8vo, (Percy Soc.)

35. The Canterbury Tales of Geoffrey Chaucer; a New Text, with Illustrative Notes, p. 8vo, 3 vols.: i., ii., 1847, and iii., 1851, (Percy Soc.:) in 1 vol. r. 8vo, 1853, (Cooke's Univ. Lib.,) and 1867, (Griffin.) To this add No. 68.

"The text here given of The Canterbury Tales is mainly founded upon the Harl. MS. [No. 7334] selected by Mr. Wright, whose edition of the Tales must always be referred to as the standard by which alone the text can be determined with safety; and it is only a just tribute to the merits of that accomplished scholar to add that he is not more distinguished by his valuable and extensive labours than by the liberality with which he communicates his knowledge: a liberality which has placed the editor and the readers of this edition under many obligations. . . . It is needless to say how highly I estimate the assistance I have received throughout from the last, and incomparably the ablest, editor of Chaucer."—Robert Bell: Introd. and Pref. to his ed. of The Poetical Works of Chaucer, Parker, 1854–56, 8 vols. fp. 8vo.

See, also, Lon. Athen., 1851, 294. To this edition—indeed, to all editions—must be added a Complete Verbal and Glossarial Index to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, Based on the Harleian MS. No. 7334, as edited by Thomas Wright for the Percy Society, &c., by Hiram Corson, A.M., editor of "Chaucer's Legende of Goode Women," &c., Phila., 8vo, in prep., 1866. Professor Corson's edition of the Legende of Goode Women was warmly commended. Mr. Richard Morris, editor of Hampole's Pricke of Conscience, Sir Gawayn, Alliterative Poems, &c., has now in preparation an edition of Chaucer's Poetical Works, (for Bell & Daldy's Aldine Poets,) founded upon the Harleian MS. No. 7334, with References to other MSS., (he published Selections from the Canterbury Tales, Macmillan, 1867, 12mo, Prologue, Knightes Tales, and Nonnes Preste's Tale, Macmillan, 1869, 2 vols. 12mo;) and Professor Francis J. Child, of Harvard, is also engaged upon a new edition of "The Morning Star of English Song." 'Loitering purples droop and dream,
Languid hazes glimmer;
Tortured by the sultry beam,

'Let the eye range. Behold, the Deep
Slowly retires her mutinous heads,
While all along her million beds
The soul of Chaos lies asleep.'

Wulfstan, or Wulstan, Bishop of Worcester, 1002 to 1016, and Archbishop of York from 1002 until his death, 1023, is supposed to be the author of the Anglo-Saxon homilies, to which is generally affixed the name of Lupus Episcopus. Sermo Lupi Episcopi, Saxonicæ: Latinam Interpretationem notasque adjecit Gulielmus Elstob, Oxon., 1701, fol. From Hickes's Thesaurus, vol. iii., 1705, fol. 99–106. There is also extant of his (MS. C. C. Coll. Cambr., No. 201, art. 7) a letter to the people of his province. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., A.-S. Period, 505; The Lives of Wulstan and St. William, Archbishops of York, 1844, 12mo.

Wulstan. See Wolstan; Wulfstan.

Wulstan, the last of the Anglo-Saxon prelates, b. 1007 or 1008, Bishop of Worcester, 1062, d. Jan. 1095–6, is supposed, on very slight grounds, by the author of Ancient History, English and French, Exemplified in a Regular Dissection of the Saxon Chronicle, Lon., 1830, 12mo, to be the author of the entries in the Saxon Chronicle from 1034 to 1079, (MS. Cotton., Tiberius, b. iv.)

Wyat, Wyatt, or Wiat, Sir Thomas, the Elder, b. at Allington Castle, Kent, 1503; entered of St. John's College, Cambridge, 1515, and took B.A. 1518, M.A. 1520; officiated for his father as sewerer at the coronation of Anne Boleyn, July, 1533, and subsequently fell into temporary disgrace with the king on her account; nominated High Sheriff for Kent, 1537, and in the same year was sent minister to Spain; charged by Bonner with treasonable correspondence with Cardinal Pole, and placed under arrest in 1540 or 1541, but soon acquitted and restored to high favour with Henry VIII.; d. at Sherborne, Oct. 11, 1542. To the editions of the poem of Surrey, Wyatt, and others, noticed on p. 899, supra, (Howard, Henry, Earl of Surrey,) we can now add The Poems of the Earl of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyatt, with Memoirs by Rev. R. Gilfillan, Edin., 1856, 8vo, and Wyatt only, 1858, 8vo; Poetical Works by Sir Thomas Wyatt, Edited by Robert Bell, Glasg. and Lon., 1866, 12mo, 1870, 12mo; and the poems of Wyatt in The Courtly Poets from Sir Walter Raleigh to James, Marquis of Montrose, Edited by John Hannah, D.D., Lon., 1870, fp. 8vo. See, also, Certaine Psalmes chosen out of the Psalmes of David commonly called VIJ Penytentiall Psalmes, drawen into Englishe Meter by Sir Thomas Wyatt, Knyght, whereunto is added a Prolog of the Aucthore before every Psalme; very pleasant and profettable to the godly Reader, Lon., 1549, 8vo. Repub., with other poetical pieces of Wyatt's, in Chalmers's English Poets, 1810, 21 vols. 8vo and r. 8vo, vol. ii. The Earl of Surrey, who survived his friend Wyatt, bewailed him in verses which have been greatly admired: two of these we quote:

"A visage stern and myld; where both did grow
Vice to contemne, in vertue to reioyce;
Amid great stormes, whom grace assured so,
To liue upright, and smile at Fortune's choyce.

"A hand that taught what might be sayd in ryme,
That reft Chaucer the glory of his wit;
A mark the which (vnparfited for time)
Some may approche, but neuer none shall hit."

"Henry, Earl of Surrey, and Sir Thomas Wyat, betweene whom I finde very little difference, I repute them (as before) for the two chief lanternes of light to all others that haue since employed their pennes vpon English Poesie; their conceits were loftie, their stiles stately, their conueyance cleanly, their termes proper, their metre sweete and well proportioned."—Puttenham: The Arte of English Poesie, 1589, 4to.

"Had your (P. Henry's) praise been limn'd with pen
Of princely Surrey, once a poet sweet,
Sir Thomas Wyat, or like gentlemen,
They on this theame discoursers had been meet."
R. Fletcher: Nine English Worthies, 1606, 4to, 51.

"Wyatt had a deeper and more accurate penetration into the characters of men than Surrey had: hence arises the difference in their satires. Surrey, in his satire against the citizens of London, deals only in reproach; Wyatt, in his, abounds with irony, and those nice touches of ridicule which make us ashamed of our faults, and therefore often silently effect amendment. Surrey's observation of nature was minute; but he directed it towards the works of nature in general, and the movements of the passions, rather than to the foibles and characters of men; hence it is that he excels in the description of rural objects, and is always tender and pathetic. In Wyatt's Complaint we hear a strain of manly grief which commands attention, and we listen to it with respect for the sake of him that suffers. Surrey's distress is painted in such natural terms that we make it our own, and recognize in his sorrows emotions which we are conscious of having felt ourselves.

"In point of taste and perception of propriety in composition, Surrey is more accurate and just than Wyatt; he therefore seldom either offends with conceits or wearies with repetition, and when he imitates other poets he is original as well as pleasing. In his numerous translations from Petrarch he is seldom inferior to his master, and he seldom improves upon him. Wyatt is almost always below the Italian, and frequently degrades a good thought by expressing it so that it is hardly recognizable. Had Wyatt attempted a translation of Virgil, as Surrey did, he would have exposed himself to unavoidable failure."—Dr. Nott: ed. of Surrey and Wyatt, 1815–16, ii. 156.

See Lon. Mon. Rev., 1817, ii. 113, 402; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1831, ii. 302.

"The lighter poems of Wyatt are more unequal than those of Surrey; but his Ode to his Lute does not seem inferior to any production of his noble competitor. The sonnet in which he intimates his secret passion for Anne Boleyn, whom he describes under the allegory of a doe, bearing on her collar—is remarkable for more than the poetry, though that is pleasing. It may be doubtful whether Anne were yet queen; but in one of Wyatt's latest poems he seems to allude penitentially to his passion for her."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 425, n.

'Noli me tangere: I, Cesar's am,'

"We must agree with a critic above quoted that Wyat cooperated with Surrey in having corrected the roughness of our poetic style. But Wyat, although sufficiently distinguished from the common versifiers of his age, is confessedly inferior to Surrey in harmony of numbers, perspicuity of expression, and facility of phraseology. Nor is he equal to Surrey in elegance of sentiment, in nature and sensibility. His feelings are disguised by affectation and obscured by conceit. His declarations of passion are also embarrassed by wit and fancy; and his style is not intelligible, in proportion as it is careless and unadorned. His compliments, like the modes of behaviour of that age, are ceremonious and strained. He has too much art as a lover, and too little as a poet. His gallantries are laboured, and his versification negligent. The truth is, his genius was of the moral and didactic species; and his poems abound more in good sense, satire, and observations on life, than in pathos or imagination. Yet there is a degree of lyric sweetness in the following lines, in which The Lover Complaineth the Unkindness of his Love. . . . Wyat may justly be deemed the first English satirist. I am of opinion that he mistook his talents when, in compliance with the mode, he became a sonnetteer; and, if we may judge from a few instances, that he was likely to have treated any other subject with more success than that of love. His abilities were seduced and misapplied by fabricating fine speeches to an obdurate mistress."—Warton: Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, iii. 42, 49, (q. v.)

"Wyatt's love-poems are certainly conceited and unnatural; but these faults belong to the models on which he formed his style, and were the faults of the time in which he lived. Wycherley, William, son of Daniel Wycherley, of Cleave, Shropshire, and Bethia Shrimpton, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, (who were married Feb. 20, 1640,) was b. 1640, and in 1655 sent to France, where he professed the Roman Catholic religion; on his return to England, became a member of Queen's College, Oxford, and, by Bishop Barlow's influence, abjured his new faith,—which, however, after a life not calculated to do credit to any church, he again embraced and adhered to (as Pope assures us) in his last moments. The chief points in his personal history are detailed in the authority from which we have just cited, and from which we shall make some apposite quotations,—premising that, after a short residence at Oxford, he was entered as a student of law in the Middle Temple, but soon became involved in the circle of fashionable dissipation in which he acquired so high an eminence.

"Wycherley was a very handsome man. His acquaintance with the famous Duchess of Cleveland commenced oddly enough. One day, as he passed that Duchess's coach in the ring, she leaned out of the window and cried out, loud enough to be heard distinctly by him, 'Sir, you're a rascal! you're a villain!' Wycherley from that instant entertained hopes. He did not fail waiting on her the next morning, and, with a very melancholy tone, begged to know how it was possible for him to have so much disobliged her Grace. They were very good friends from that time."—Pope: Spence's Anec., sect. i.

"Wycherley was in a bookseller's shop at Bath, or Tunbridge, when Lady Drogheda came in and happened to inquire for the Plain Dealer. A friend of Wycherley's, who stood by him, pushed him toward her, and said, 'There's the Plain Dealer, Madam, if you want him.' Wycherley made his excuses, and Lady Drogheda said that 'she loved plain dealing best.' He afterwards visited that lady, and in some time after married her. This proved a great blow to his fortunes: just before the time of his courtship he was designed for governor to the late Duke of Richmond, and was to have been allowed fifteen hundred pounds a year from the government. His absence from court in the progress of this amour, and his being yet more absent after his marriage, (for Lady Drogheda was very jealous of him,) disgusted his friends there so much that he lost all his interest with them. His lady died, and his misfortunes were such that he was thrown into the Fleet, and lay there seven years. It was then that Colonel Brett got his Plain Dealer to be acted, and contrived to get the king (James the Second) to be there. The colonel attended him thither. The king was mightily pleased with the play,—asked who was the author of it; and, upon hearing that it was one of Wycherley's, complained that he had not seen him for so many years, and inquired what was become of him. The colonel improved this opportunity so well that the king gave orders his debts should be discharged out of the privy purse. Wycherley was so weak as to give an account only of five hundred pounds, and so was confined almost half a year, till his father was at last prevailed on to pay the rest,—between two and three hundred pounds more."—John Dennis: Spence's Anec., sect. i.

He again became embarrassed by debt; and as his father's estate, to which he succeeded, was entailed, and the income attached by the son's creditors, he saw no mode of relief at a period of life when cares of this kind are not easily borne. In his 80th year he was married to a young woman with a fortune of £1500, which was soon reduced by the husband, who died Jan. 1, 1715, eleven days after his nuptials. As an author, he is chiefly known by four comedies, first acted respectively in the years in which they were published, viz.: 1. Love in a Wood; or, St. James' Park, Lon., 1672, 4to; 1694, 4to. 2. The Gentleman Dancing-Master, 1673, 4to; 1693, 4to. 3. The Country Wife, 1675, 4to; 1683, 4to; 1695, 4to; 1777, 12mo. 4. The Country Girl; altered from Wycherley by Garrick, 1790, 12mo. The Plain Dealer, 1677, 4to; 1686, 4to; 1694, 4to. The Plain Dealer, with Illustrations, (by Bickerstaff,) 1766, 8vo. Wycherley's Plays, (Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, supra,) 1712, 8vo; 1720, 2 vols. 12mo; 1731, 12mo; 1735, 12mo; 1768, 12mo; Dubl., 1775, 12mo. "The chronology of Wycherley's plays I am well acquainted with, for he has told it me over and over. 'Love in a Wood' he wrote when he was but nineteen; 'The Gentleman Dancing-Master' at twenty-one; 'The Plain Dealer' at twenty-five; and 'The Country Wife' at one- or two-and-thirty."—POPE: Spence's Anec., sect. iv.

"We are incredulous, we own, as to the truth of this story. Nothing that we know of Wycherly leads us to think him incapable of sacrificing truth to vanity. And his memory in the decline of his life played him such strange tricks that we might question the correctness of his assertion without throwing any imputation on his veracity. It is certain that none of his plays was acted till 1672, when he gave Love in a Wood to the public. . . . When we look minutely at the pieces themselves, we find in every part of them reasons to suspect the accuracy of Wycherley's statement. . . . His fame as a writer rests wholly on his comedies, and chiefly on the last two. Even as a comic writer, he was neither of the best school nor highest in his school. He was, in truth, a worse Congreve. His chief merit, like Congreve's, lies in the style of his dialogue. But the wit which lights up The Plain Dealer and The Country Wife is pale and flickering when compared with the gorgeous blaze which dazzles us almost to blindness in Love for Love and The Way of the World. . . . In truth, his mind, unless we are greatly mistaken, was naturally a very meagre soil, and was forced only by great labour and outlay to bear fruit, which, after all, was not of the highest flavour. He had scarcely more claim to originality than Terence. It is not too much to say that there is hardly any thing of the least value in his plays of which the hint is not to be found elsewhere. . . . The only thing original about Wycherley, the only thing which he could furnish from his own mind in inexhaustible abundance, was profligacy. It is curious to observe how every thing that he touched, however pure and noble, took in an instant the colour of his own mind. . . . We pass a very severe censure on Wycherley when we say that it is a relief to turn from him to Congreve."—LORD MACAULAY: Comic Dramatists of the Restoration: Edin. Rev., Jan. 1841, and in his Essays.

"Wycherley was ambitious of the reputation of wit and libertinism; and he attained it: he was probably capable of reaching the fame of true comedy and instructive ridicule."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxxi.

"Wycherley was before Congreve; and his 'Country Wife' will last longer than any thing of Congreve's as a popular acting play. It is only a pity that it is not entirely his own; but it is enough so to do him never-ceasing honour, for the best things are his own. His humour is, in general, broader, his characters more natural, and his incidents more striking, than Congreve's. It may be said of Congreve, that the workmanship overlays the materials: in Wycherley, the casting of the parts and the fable are alone sufficient to ensure success. We forget Congreve's characters, and only remember what they say: we remember Wycherley's characters and the incidents they meet with, just as if they were real, and forget what they say, comparatively speaking."—HAZLITT: *Lects. on the Eng. 6. Posthumous Works, in Prose and Verse, published from his Original MSS. by Lewis Theobald; to which are prefixed Some Memoirs of Mr. Wycherley's Life, by Major Pack, 1728, 8vo.

"Wycherley was really angry with me for correcting his verses so much. I was extremely plagued up and down for almost two years with them. However, it went off pretty well at last; and it appears, by the edition of Wycherley's Posthumous Works, that he had followed the advice I so often gave him, and that he had gone so far as to make some hundreds of prose maxims out of his verses. Those verses that are published are a mixture of Wycherley's own original lines with a great many of mine inserted here and there, (but not difficult to be distinguished,) and some of Wycherley's, softened a little in the running, probably by Theobald, who had the chief care of that edition."—POPE: Spence's Anec., sect. iv.

Wycliffe, Wyklyf, Wicliff, Wycliffe, or Wiclif, (there are about twenty variations,) John De, D.D., "The Morning Star of the Reformation," b., according to the assertion of Leland, (Itinerary, v. 99,) happily confirmed by Dr. Vaughan, (Lon. Athen., 1861, i. 529,) "at Sprewsel, a poor village, a good mile from Richmont," Yorkshire, about 1324, and, according to his biographers, save Mr. Shirley, who is skeptical as regards this statement, educated at Queen's College and Merton College, Oxford, in 1361, (before which time he is said to have warmly opposed the Mendicant Orders;) was made Warden or Master of Balliol Hall, and in the same year was presented to the rectory of Fylingham or Fillingham, Yorkshire; was subsequently Rector of Ludgershall; in 1365 appears to have resigned the mastership of Balliol Hall for that of Canterbury Hall, but was ejected in 1366; became Rector of Lutterworth, Leicestershire, 1374, and Prebendary of Worcester, 1375; was arraigned for heresy, by a convocation of the clergy at St. Paul's, in 1377, and again, by order of Pope Gregory, at the same place, in 1378; d. at his rectory of Lutterworth, after an indefatigable warfare against the corruptions of faith and practice then prevalent, Dec. 31, 1384.

About thirty years after his death, i.e. on May 5, 1415, the Council of Constance (the same assembly of saints which burned John Huss and Jerome of Prague) condemned forty-five articles maintained by Wycliffe, as heretical, false, and erroneous, and ordered that his bones should be dug out of consecrated ground and cast on a dunghill. This disgraceful sentence—there was some manhood left in England—was not executed until 1428, when orders were sent by Pope Clement VIII. to the Bishop of Lincoln to have it strictly carried out. Therefore, after a rest of forty-four years, his remains were exhumed and burnt; and the ashes were cast into the Swift, (a branch of the Avon,) which runs by the foot of the hill on which the town of Lutterworth is built.

"Thus," exclaims the eloquent Fuller, "this brook did convey his ashes into Avon; Avon into Severn; Severn into the narrow sea; and this into the wide ocean. And so the ashes of Wickliffe are the emblem of his doctrine, which is now dispersed all the world over."—Fuller's Church History.

Thus beautifully rendered by Wordsworth:

> "Wiclif is disinhumed,
> Yea, his dry bones to ashes are consumed,
> And flung into the brook that travels near:
> Forthwith that ancient voice which streams can hear
> Thus speaks—(that voice which walks upon the wind, > Though seldom heard by busy human kind:)
> As thou these ashes, little brook, wilt bear
> Into the Avon—Avon to the tide
> Of Severn—Severn to the narrow seas—
> Into main ocean they—this deed accurst
> An emblem yields to friends and enemies,
> How the bold teacher's doctrine, sanctified
> By truth, shall spread throughout the world dispersed."

"The grain of mustard-seed which was now sown became a great tree. The doctrine which Wycliffe propagated with so much zeal and ability could not again be suppressed: the seat of Antichrist was gradually shaken from its old foundation; and the impulse which he gave to religious inquiry is apparently destined to reach the latest ages of futurity. His theological opinions cannot be detailed in this brief and imperfect notice. It may, however, be remarked that he clearly anticipated the most distinguishing doctrines of the Protestants, and that his opinions on certain points present an obvious coincidence with those of Calvin. . . . The influence of Wycliffe's doctrines soon extended from England to the Continent, and their connexion with the subsequent progress of the Reformation may very easily be traced. The next conspicuous stage was the kingdom of Bohemia. The King of Bohemia's sister was the consort of Richard the Second, and she came to England in the year 1382. She was a religious princess, and constantly studied the four Gospels in English, explained by the expositions of the doctors. The Bohemians who had frequented her court returned to their own country, and carried along with them some of the works of the great Reformer, which, being written in Latin, were intelligible to the learned of all the European nations. Jerome of Prague, who had studied in the University of Oxford, is said to have translated many of his works into the Bohemian language; but, according to another and more probable account, he only copied some of them in England, and carried the transcripts to Bohemia. By this eminent person, and by his pious leader John Huss, the writings and character of Wycliffe were held in the highest veneration; and they endeavoured to follow his footsteps, by contributing to remove the corruptions of the church." —David Irving, LL.D.: Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi., 1860, 947, art. Wycliffe.

"Had it not been for the obstinate perverseness of our prelates against the divine and admirable spirit of Wickliffe, to suppress him as a schismatic and innovator, perhaps neither the Bohemian Husse and Jerome, no, nor the name of Luther or of Calvin, had ever been known: the glory of reforming all our neighbours had been completely ours. But now, as our obdurate clergy have with violence demeaned the matter, we are become the latest and the backwardest scholars of whom God offered to have made us the teachers."—John Milton: Areopagitica: A Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing to the Parliament of England, 1644.

"Wickliff, that Englishman honoured of God to be the first preacher of a general reformation to all Europe."—John Milton: Tetrachordon.

But, on the other hand,—for I desire to do justice to all sides in the controversies which come under my notice,—a justification of the condemnation of Wycliffe is attempted by Heribertus Rosweydus in his De Fide Hæreticis Servanda ex Decreto Concilii Constantiensis Dissertatio cum Daniele Plancio, Scholæ Delphensis Moderatore; in qua quæ de Husso Historia est excutitur, Antverpiæ, 1610, 8vo.

I continue notices of Wycliffe:

"Vir excellenti ingenio, magno animo, et pietate solida præstans, sed quem linguarum sacrarum peritia, literarumque elegantiorum studia deficiebant."—Jablonski: Instit. Hist. Christ., i. 329.

"The English had not for ages been bigoted Papists. In the fourteenth century, the first, and perhaps the greatest, of the reformers, John Wickliffe, had stirred the public mind to its inmost depths. . . . It is clear that a hundred years before the time of Luther a great party in this kingdom was eager for a change, at least as extensive as that which was subsequently effected by Henry the Eighth."—Lord Macaulay: Nares's Memoirs of Lord Burghley: Edin. Rev., April, 1832, 287, and in his Essays.

"During the session of the Popes for seventy years to Avignon, and the schism which ensued on their return to Italy, not only grew up the strong league of the hierarchy against the autocracy of the Pope; . . . in England also had appeared the first powerful adversary of the whole hierarchial system, and sowed deep in the popular mind thoughts, opinions, passions, which eventually led to the emancipation of mankind from sacerdotal and from Latin Christianity. The first teacher who shook with any lasting effect the dominion of the hierarchy—the harbinger, at least, if not the first apostle, of Teutonic Christianity—was John Wycliffe. . . . As with his contemporary and most congenial spirit, Chaucer, rose English poetry, . . . so was Wycliffe the Father of English prose: rude, but idiomatic, biblical in much of its picturesque phraseology, at once highly coloured by and colouring the Translation of the Scriptures. . . . Wycliffe had now at least begun his great work, the Complete English Version of the Scriptures; and as the work proceeds it more entirely engrosses his mind, and assumes its place as the sole authority for religious belief. It must have been sent out and widely promulgated in different portions, or it could not, before the days of printing, have become so familiar to the popular mind as to give ground to the bitter complaint of one of Wycliffe's adversaries [see Knighton, in Twys. Dec. Scrip., i. 2644] that laymen and women who could read were better acquainted with the Scripture than the most learned and intelligent of the clergy. . . . His industry, even in those laborious days, was astonishing. The number of his books, mostly indeed brief tracts, baffles calculation. Two hundred are said to have been burned in Bohemia. How much of the translation of the Scriptures he executed himself is not precisely known; but, even if in parts only superintended, it was a prodigious achievement for one man, so deeply involved as he was in polemical warfare with the hierarchy, the monks, and the Mendicant Orders. He was acknowledged to be a consummate master in the dialectics of the Schools: he was the pride as well as the terror of Oxford. 'He was second to none,' so writes a monk, [Knighton,] 'in philosophy; in the discipline of the schools, incomparable.' In this, indeed, appear at once his strength and the source of the apparent contradictions in the style and matter of his writings. Wycliffe was a subtile schoolman and a popular religious pamphleteer. He addressed the students of the University in the language and in the logic of their schools; he addressed the vulgar, which included no doubt the whole laity and a vast number of the parochial clergy, in the simplest and most homely vernacular phrase. Hence he is, as it were, two writers: his Latin is dry, argumentative, syllogistic, abstruse, obscure; his English rude, coarse, but clear, emphatic, brief, vehement, with short stinging sentences, and perpetual hard antithesis. . . . Wycliff's Bible, as translated from the Vulgate, had not so entirely shaken off the trammels of Latinity as our later versions; but this first bold assertion of Teutonic independence immeasurably strengthened, even in its language, that independence. It tasked the language, as it were, to its utmost vigour, copiousness, and flexibility, and, by thus putting it on its trial, forced out all those latent and undeveloped qualities. It was constantly striving to be English, and by striving became so more and more. Compare the freedom and versatility of Wycliffe's Bible with Wycliffe's Tracts! Wycliffe has not only advanced in the knowledge of purer and more free religion, he is becoming a master of purer and more free English."—H. H. Milman: Hist. of Lat. Chris., vii., b. xiii. ch. vi., and viii., b. xiv ch. vii. See, also, Wykeham, William.

The first edition of Wycliffe's translation, The New Testament, Translated out of the Latin Vulgat, by John Wiclif, S.T.D., about 1378, to which is Præfixt, &c., Lon., 1731, fol., 150 copies, we have already noticed, (Lewis, John, No. 4.) There was subsequently published The New Testament, Translated from the Latin, in the Year 1380, by John Wycliff, D.D.; to which are prefixed Memoirs of the Life, Opinions, and Writings of Dr. Wycliff, and an Historical Account of the Saxon and English Versions of the Scriptures previous to the Fifteenth Century; by the Rev. Henry Hervey Baber, M.A., 1810, 4to; l. p., r. 4to, £1 11*s.* 6*d.* Wycliffe's New Testament was also published in Bagster's English Hexapla, 1841, 4to. There has since appeared Wycliffe's New Testament: the First Translation into English, and now for the First Time Printed from a Contemporary MS. written about 1380, formerly in the Monastery of Sion, and late in the Collection of Lea Wilson, F.S.A., Pickering, printed in black letter by C. Whittingham, Chiswick Press, 1848, sm. 4to, on thick paper, £2 2*s.*; antique calf, £2 12*s.* 6*d.* On vellum, 2 or 3 copies: Maskell, May, 1854, £18 18*s.* This version is earlier than the one published by Lewis, and differs greatly from it. See, also, The Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Gospels in Parallel Columns, with the Versions of Wycliffe and Tyndale: Arranged, with Preface and Notes, by the Rev. Jos. Bosworth, Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Oxford; Assisted by G. Waring, Esq., M.A., Lon., J. R. Smith, 1865, 8vo, 12*s.* 6*d.*

"This book is a great boon to the students of English."—Lon. Reader 1865, ii. 650.

"Of the merit attaching to their [the translators of "King James's"] version, a considerable share belongs to Tyndale. Parker's Bible was the professed basis, and that was a version of Cranmer's. Cranmer's Bible was chiefly a correction of Matthews's, or, in other words, of Tyndale's, so far as Tyndale had translated. Thus King James's translation resolves itself at last in no small measure into Tyndale's; and when we consider the adverse circumstances continually pressing upon that noble-minded man, with the little assistance he could obtain, the work which he produced assumes a pre-eminent position amid the immortal monuments of human learning and skill."—Bibl. Cyc., ii. 919.

A manuscript of Wycliffe's New Testament, with a version of the Lessons and Epistles, written about 1380, comprised in 2 vols. small 12mo, formerly in the possession of Sir Edward Dering, was sold from the library of Dean Conybeare, Dec. 1857, for £145. Selections from Wycliffe's New Testament will be found in Cruttwell's edition of Bishop Thomas Wilson's Bible, Bath, 1785, 3 vols. 4to.

But it is only within the last twenty years that the whole of Wycliffe's version was given to the world: The Holy Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, with the Apocryphal Books, in the Earliest English Versions, made from the Latin Vulgate, by John Wycliffe and his Followers; Edited by the Rev. Josiah Forshall, F.R.S., and Sir Frederick Madden, K.H., F.R.S., Oxford University Press, 1850, 4 vols. r. 4to, £5 15*s.* 6*d.* The editors laboured more or less on this work for nearly twenty years. 170 MSS. were collected. Various readings, a glossary, historical preface, description of the MSS., &c., add greatly to the value of the volumes. At the sale of Archbishop Tenison's MSS., July 1, 1861, a portion of Wycliffe's translation of the Old Testament, written on vellum, was sold for £150.

Mr. Shirley has since favoured us with a Catalogue of the Original Works of John Wiclif, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1865, 8vo. He projects a complete edition of Wycliffe's English works, with a selection from his Latin works. The Early English Text Society had intended to issue Wycliffe's Sharp Treatises against the Friars in the library of Corpus Christi College, but it has yielded the whole field to Mr. Shirley, who, we presume, will avail himself of the vellum MS. discovered at Vienna in 1863, containing fifty treatises in Latin by Wycliffe, one of which, De Officio Pastorale, was published by Professor Lechner in 1863. See, also, Wiclif, Trialogus cum Supp. Trialogi, by G. Lechler, 1869, 8vo.

We had almost forgotten to state that some of Wycliffe's English treatises were disposed of at the sale of Archbishop Tenison's MSS., July 1, 1861, for £37 10*s*.

Some years ago, one of his warmest admirers complained:

"To the memory of Wyclif—one of the greatest of Englishmen—his country has been singularly and painfully ungrateful. Of his works, the greatest—the Trialogus, one of the most thoughtful of the middle ages—has twice been printed abroad, in England never. Of his original English works nothing beyond one or two tracts (the 'General Prologue to the Bible' and 'Wycliffe's Wychet') have seen the light. If considered only as the father of English prose, the great reformer might claim more reverential treatment at our hands. As it is in the light of subsequent events that we see the greatness of Wyclif as a reformer, so it is from the later growth of the language that we best learn to appreciate the beauty of his writings. But it was less the reformer, or the master of English prose, than the great schoolman, that inspired the respect of his contemporaries; and next to the deep influence of his personal holiness, and the attractive greatness of his moral character, it was to his supreme command of the weapons of scholastic discussion that he owed his astonishing influence."—Rev. W. W. Shirley.

"Wykeham, the splendid, munificent, in character blameless Prelate, was wise enough to devote his vast riches to the promotion of learning, and by the foundation of noble colleges was striving to continue the spell of the hierarchical power over the human mind. Wycliffe, seeing the more common abuse of that power by Prelates of baser and more sordid worldliness, sought the interests of Christ's religion in the depression, in the abrogation, of the mediæval hierarchy. The religious annals of England may well be proud of both."—H. H. MILMAN: Hist. of Lat. Chris., vol. vii., book xiii. ch. vi.

Wynne, Edward, son of Serjeant William Wynne, (infra,) was b. 1734, divided his time between his attractive library at Chelsea (the room had the reputation of having been John Locke's "study") and the courts of law, and d. 1784. 1. Miscellany; containing several Law Tracts, Lon., 1765, 8vo. Anon. Privately printed: a few copies only. Reed, 6415, 16*s.* 6*d.* The Tracts are seven in number. No. iv. was also privately printed separately in 1785, and pub. in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1785, i. 127. Nos. vi. and vii. are by Serjeant William Wynne. 2. Eunomus; or, Dialogues concerning the Law and Constitution of England; with an Essay on Dialogue, 1767, 4 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1774, 4 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1785, 4 vols. 8vo: Dubl., 1791, 8vo; Lon., 1809, 2 vols.: 4th ed. (so called,) 1821, 2 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., (so called,) with Notes, and a Dissertation on a Course of Reading for Students, by W. M. Bythewood, 1822, 2 vols. 12mo. As the early editions appeared anonymously, it is generally cited by the title Eunomus only.

"It may be worth adding that Wynne was the author of an elegant work, written in the form of dialogues, entitled Eunomus; or, Discourses upon the Laws of England, 4 vols. 8vo. It happened to be published at the time when Sir William Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England made their appearance, and, in consequence, has seen only three editions, the last being published in 1809, 2 vols. 8vo."—DR. DIBDIN: Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 324, n.

"Greatly valued, as having very much illustrated the principles of our law and constitution, and given an instructive and rational account of the several branches into which the practice of the law is divided," &c.—Bridgman's Leg. Bibl., 112.

Campbell, 1869, 2 vols. 8vo.

"These lectures possess a degree of value, and deserve a position in English literature, which it is difficult to rate too highly. With the single exception of Jeremy Bentham, the late Mr. Austin was the only Englishman of any considerable ability who ever made the study of jurisprudence proper the object of his life."—*Lon. Wyntown, Wynton, Wyntoun, Wyntoune, or Winton, Andrew, or Andrew of, the third (Thomas the Rhymer and John Barbour being the first and second) of the early Scotch poets whose works are extant, was a canon regular of the priory of St. Andrews, and in or before 1395 was elected Prior of St. Serf's Inch, or Island, Lochleven, Scotland. He was prior at least as late as 1413, and records the death of Robert, Duke of Albany, which occurred in 1420. But the dates of his own birth and death are unknown. De Orygynale Cronykil of Scotland, be Andrew of Wyntown, Priour of Sanct Serfis Ynche in Loch Levyn: Now first published, with Notes and a Glossary, &c., by David Macpherson, Lon., Bensley, 1795, 2 vols. r. 8vo, 250 copies: Bibl. "David Macpherson's edition of Winton's Chronicles of Scotland, put forth in a manner which might have been [but fortunately was not] a model for every publication of the kind."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1831, 442.

I am now to defend my interpolation ut supra. Instead of printing Wynton's manuscript (nine chapters) as he found it,

"Mr. Macpherson therefore in his edition has suppressed all the extraneous and foreign appendages, only preserving the metrical contents of the chapters, by which the reader may know the nature of what is withheld; and taking care that nothing which relates to the British islands, whether true or fabulous, is overlooked. It is not likely that any future editor of Wyntown will adopt a different plan, [we hope otherwise;] so that those parts which Mr. Macpherson has omitted may be considered as having commenced the undisturbed sleep of oblivion."—Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Em. Scots., ed. 1855, iv. 494.

Let us have Wyntown's whole story, from the creation and the birth of Cain to the death of the Duke of Albany. His Cronykil, which is in couplets, chiefly of eight syllables, though lines of ten and others of six syllables frequently occur, was undertaken at the suggestion of an ancestor of the Earls of Wemyss:

"This tretys symplly
I made at the instans of a larde
That hade my serwys in his warde,
Schyr Ihone of the Wemys be rycht name,
Ane honest knycht and of gude fame."

"In Wyntoun's Chronicle the historian may find what, for want of more ancient records, which have long ago perished, we must now consider as the original accounts of many transactions, and also many events related from his own knowledge or the reports of eye-witnesses. His faithful adherence to his authorities appears from comparing his accounts with unquestionable vouchers, such as the Fœdera Angliæ, and the existing remains of the 'Register of the Priory of St. Andrews,'—that venerable monument of ancient Scottish history and antiquities, generally coeval with the facts recorded in it,—whence he has given large extracts almost literally translated."—David Macpherson: Preface to the Cronykil.

See, also, Macpherson, David, No. 1. Macpherson based his edition on the royal MS. in the British Museum, but he consulted other MSS. in that institution and in the Advocates' Library. There are also other MSS. extant, e.g. one in the Lansdowne collection, (lately added to the British Museum,) and one in the library of Captain Weymss of Wemyss,—and who has a better right to it?

Selden, Pinkerton, Hales, Ruddiman, (in his edition of Buchanan, Innes, (in his Critical Essay on the Ancient Inhabitants of Scotland,) and Sir Walter Scott, (in his narrative poems,) give evidence of their knowledge of the pages of Andrew of Wyntoune. But Wood, who knew Wyrley well, tells us Erdeswicke "was oftentimes crazed," and warns us not to believe him. At the end of the Trve Vse of Armorie, which occupies but 28 pages, are two poems by Wyrley, entitled Lord Chandos, and Capitall de Buz.

Yalden, John. Compendium Politicum; or, The Distempers of Government, &c., Lon., 1680, 8vo. By Sir Robert Cotton.

Yalden, or, correctly written, Youlding, Thomas, D.D., was, according to Wood, (whose account we follow in preference to Biog. Brit., Jacob's Poets, and Johnson's Poets,) the son of Thomas Youlding, an exciseman in Oxford, and b. at that place, Jan. 2, 1669–70; admitted of Magdalene College, Oxford, (where he was intimate with Sacheverell and Addison,) 1690, and became Fellow, 1700; presented to the living of Willoughby, Warwickshire, 1700, and chosen Lecturer of Moral Philosophy at Oxford, 1701; became Rector of Chalton and Cleanville in Hertfordshire, and had also the sinecure prebends of Deans, Harris, and Pendles in Devonshire; Preacher of Bridewell Hospital, 1713; arrested for supposed complicity with what is known as Bishop Atterbury's Plot, in 1722, but soon cleared and released; d. July 16, 1736. He published an Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, 1693; On the Conquest of Namur, a Pindaric Ode, 1695, fol.; The Temple of Fame, a Poem, 1700, fol.; a collection of fables in verse, under the title of Æsop at Court, 1702, repub. in Nichols's Collection, vol. iv. 198–226; an Essay on the Character of Sir Willoughby Ashton, a Poem, 1704, fol.; On the Mines of Carbery Price, a Poem; A Hymn to Darkness; A Hymn to Light; a translation of the Second Book of Ovid's Art of Love, and other translations and poems; a Sermon on Daniel iv. 27, 1721, 4to, and a Sermon on Isaiah lviii. 10, 11, 1728, 4to. Nine of his poems are in Dryden's (Tonson's) Third Miscellany, 1693, 8vo, and 1726; seven in Dryden's Fourth Miscellany, 1694, 8vo; some in Lintot's Miscellanies, 1709 and 1726; some in Nichols's Collection, vols. iii. and iv.; and collections of his poems, with memoirs, will be found in the British Poets of Johnson and Chalmers, vol. xi., Dr. Anderson, vol. vii., and Robert Walsh, vol. xvii.

"Of his poems, many are of that irregular kind which, when he formed his poetical character, was supposed to be Pindaric. Having fixed his attention on Cowley as a model, he has attempted in some sort to rival him, and has written a 'Hymn to Darkness,' evidently as a counterpart to Cowley's 'Hymn to Light.' This hymn seems to be his best performance, and is, for the most part, imagined with great vigour and expressed with great propriety. . . . His 'Hymn to Light' is not equal to the other. . . . Of his other poems it is sufficient to say that they deserve perusal, though they are not always exactly polished, though his rhymes are sometimes very ill sorted, and though his faults seem rather the omissions of idleness than the negligences of enthusiasm."—Dr. Johnson: Lives of the Eng. Poets, Cunningham's ed., (in which some of Johnson's errors are corrected,) 1854, ii. 314, 315.

Johnson tells us (Life of Dr. Watts) that it was by his recommendation that the poems of Yalden, Pomfret, Watts, and Blackmore were included in the edition of the English Poets for which he furnished the Lives. As a prose writer, Yalden is favourably known by Squire Bickerstaff Detected; or, The Astrological Impostor Convicted, a mock answer to Swift's attacks on Partridge, (see Partridge, John,) written by Yalden at the request of the latter, and published by him in his own name, in entire innocence respecting the joke. This witty piece was republished in Swift's Works. See Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iv. 601, Cibber's Lives, and authorities above cited.

Yarrell, William, an eminent British naturalist, b. June, 1784, in Duke Street, St. James's, Westminster, the son of a newspaper agent, succeeded to, and carried on until within a few years of his death, Sept. 6, 1856, the paternal profession: it enabled him to leave a fortune of £17,000. He died a bachelor. His collection of British fishes and the specimens illustrative of his papers in the Linnæan Society were, at the sale of his effects, (Dec. 1856,) secured by the Trustees of the British Museum. He became a Fellow of the Linnæan Society in 1825. From this date until his death eighty-one papers were communicated or read by him to scientific societies (Trans. Linn. Soc., Phil. Trans., Trans. Zoolog. Soc., &c.) or journals, (Zoolog. Jour., Annals and Mag. of Nat. Hist., &c.,) and he contributed a chapter on Fishes to W. H. Harvey's Sea-Side Book. He was for a long time a Vice-President of the Zoological Society. For more detailed notices of his services to the literature of natural history, we refer to Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1856; Lon. Athen., 1856, 1143; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1856, ii. 512; Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., vi., 1858, 878; Zoological Bibliography of the Ray Society, (notices upwards of seventy of his papers.) But the most durable monuments to his fame are his two great works on Fishes and Birds, which will long be standard authorities with the naturalist.

"No work on this subject since the time of Bewick's 'Birds' has been so popular. In many of his details, especially his picturesque tail-pieces, he imitated his great predecessor; but in point of accuracy of description and the homely truthfulness of his account of the habits of birds, Mr. Yarrell has had no equal."—Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., vi., 1858, 879.

"These works [Nos. 2 and 3] are compiled on the same plan; they contain accurate figures, with accompanying descriptions, of every known variety of British fish or bird; and they have from the first taken their position as the standard authorities on the subject in our language. Few books on natural history are more agreeable to the general reader: the style is ever pleasant, and the truth with which he describes the habits of the birds is such as might have been expected from the keen sportsman who had so often watched their motions when at liberty in their native haunts."—Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi., 1860, 953.

Yearsley, Mrs. Anne, (Lactilla,) b. at Bristol about 1756, was living in great poverty as a milk-woman at Clifton, near Bristol, when, under the patronage of Hannah More, who revised her pieces, she published her first volume of poems. The profits of this book, over £600, Miss More and Mr. Montagu desired to invest for the benefit of the author; but she insisted upon having, and obtained, the whole amount, and with it established a circulating library at Bristol Hot Wells. According to the accounts of Miss More and her biographer, (see Roberts's Memoirs of H. More, vol. i. ch. iv.,) she was guilty of great ingratitude to her friends. Mr. Cottle (see Keddie's Cyc. of Lit. and Sci. Anec., 175) thinks that she has been unduly censured; and her own Narrative (see No. 2) should be perused. Her latter years were passed in retirement at Melksham, Wiltshire, where she d. in 1806.

"Her ear, as you remark, is perfect; but that, being a gift of nature, amazes me less. Her expressions are more exalted than poetic, and discover taste, as you say, rather than discover flights of fancy and wild ideas, as one should expect."—Horace Walpole to Hannah More, Nov. 13, 1784: Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 523.

Reports de divers Speciall Cases en le Court del Bank le Roy, cy bien en le darrien Temps del Reigne du Roigne Elizabeth, come en les premiers dix ans del Roy Jaques, (1603–13,) published by Sir William Wylde, Lon., 1661, fol.; 2d ed., 1674, fol. Third edition, carefully translated into English, 1735, fol.; 4th ed., 1792, 8vo; 1803, 8vo. First American from the 4th Lon. ed., with Notes to Prior and Subsequent Decisions, by Theron Metcalf, Andover, 1820, 8vo.

"The cases contained in his Reports are very concisely given, and very meagre in point of reasoning and illustration, but are of great weight as authorities in the formation of the existing common law. . . . But the peculiar value of the present edition consists in the great number of excellent notes with which it has been enriched by the American editor."—Henry Wheaton: 16 N. Amer. Rev., 198.

"Enriched with copious, valuable, and accurate notes, by Mr. Metcalf."—1 Kent's Com., 485.

"Characterized in a high degree by discrimination, accuracy, and research. . . . No one who can buy this form of the book will ever care to possess the English."—Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 154, q. v. for an interesting account of Yelverton: compare it with the notices of the two Henries Yelverton in Bliss's Wood's Athen. See, also, A Woman's Trials: The Life and Letters of the Hon. Mrs. Yelverton; with an Account of the Yelverton Marriage Suit, N. York, Nov. 1867, 24mo, pp. 32. In August, 1867, the House of Lords decided against Mrs. Yelverton, and in the next month she visited the United States.

"I need only refer to the painful case of Mrs. Yelverton to prove what I have stated. An Irish court has solemnly affirmed the validity of her Irish marriage, and a Scotch court has as solemnly repudiated it, and maintained the legality of her husband's subsequent Scotch marriage, while the English court of last appeal has refused to recognize either, leaving to Mrs. Yelverton the alternative of prosecuting her husband for bigamy." —Aug. 10, 1867.

its occasional lines, the poem, as a whole, is repugnant in story, ponderous in style, false in philosophy."—Lon. Athen., 1854, 49.

"This book we hesitate not to pronounce the richest volume of recent poetry next to 'Festus.' . . . While 'The Roman' was full of beauties, 'Balder' is overflowing; and the beauties, we think, are of a rarer and profounder sort."—Rev. G. Gilfillan: Third Gall. of Lit. Portraits.

Yong, or Younge, John, called sometimes Joannes Giovanus, Master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, became Preb. of Westminster, 1572, and Bishop of Bristol, 1578; d. 1605, aged 71. Sermon on Ps. cxxxi. 1, Lon., 1575, 8vo.

Yonge, Charles Duke, Professor of History and English Literature in Queen's College, Belfast, son of the Rev. Charles Yonge, Lower Master of Eton College, b. 1812, and educated at Eton and at Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1835, taking a first-class degree, is well known by his excellent educational manuals and several historical works. 1. Exercises in Greek Prose Composition, Lon., 12mo. 2. The Hippolytus of Euripides, with English Notes, &c., 1846, 12mo. 3. Exercises for Latin Verses out of their Own Sense, 2d ed., 1848, 12mo. 4. English-Greek Lexicon; containing all the Greek Words used by Writers of Good Authority, &c., 1849, p. 4to; 2d ed., 1856, p. 4to; 5th ed., 1865, p. 4to. (Uniform with Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon and J. E. Riddle's Latin-English Lexicon.) American edition, with Numerous New Articles, an Appendix of Proper Names, Pillon's Greek Synonyms, and An Essay on the Order of Words in Attic Greek Prose, by Charles Short, LL.D., Professor of Latin in Columbia College, New York; edited by Henry Drisler, LL.D., Professor of Greek in Columbia College, editor of "Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon," &c. &c., N. York, Harper & Brothers, 1870, r. 8vo, pp. cxv., 663, cviii., (Greek Synonyms from the French of Alex. Pillon, edited, with Notes, by Rev. T. K. Arnold,) cix.–cxv., (Index.)

"The learned editor . . . has made such extensive and important additions to it as to render it far more serviceable to scholars than the English edition. . . . The most striking original contribution of a special character which has been made to the work is an Essay on the Order of Words in Attic Greek Prose, by Prof. Charles Short. . . . We doubt much whether any thing has recently appeared more creditable to the classical scholarship of this country. It represents not only a mass of general grammatical and syntactical knowledge, but an extended course of special reading among the Attic prose writers. No student can turn over its pages without being struck with its valuable and elaborate character. Professor Short has by this investigation placed himself in the first rank of the Hellenists of the age. It is understood that he has, in addition to his general efforts to advance classical scholarship and criticism in this country, given long-continued attention to the illustration and exposition of Homer; and it is to be sincerely hoped, now that Homeric studies are attracting notice, that he will be induced to give the public the results of his researches and reflections."—Amer. Lit. Gaz., June 1, 1870, 78.

Professor Drisler, in his preface to this edition of Yonge's Lexicon, "calls the attention of scholars to Dr. Short's Essay, "as the first attempt to collect in a single treatise the various points of this difficult and extensive subject; not even among the Germans has any thing so full and so systematic been undertaken." We add that all classical Greek Lexicons should be supplemented by the Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods, (from B.C. 146 to A.D. 1100,) by E. A. Sophocles, Bost., 1870, r. 8vo: favourably reviewed in the Bookseller, (London,) Aug. 3, 1870, 653. Yonge's English-Greek Lexicon, abridged from the larger work, 1864, sq. cr. 8vo, pp. 481. 5. A New Gradus ad Parnassum of the Latin Language; containing every Word used by the Poets of Good Authority, &c., 1850, p. 8vo; 8th ed., 1863, p. 8vo. Also sold bound in 1 vol. with No. 9, infra. Commended by Jour. of Educ., Lon. Spec., and John Bull. 6. Exercises in Latin Prose Composition, 1850, 12mo. 7. The Accidence or First Rudiments of the Latin Tongue, 1852, 12mo. 8. A New Phraseological English-Latin and Latin-English Dictionary, p. 8vo: Pt. 1, 1855; Pt. 2, 1856: also in 1 vol., 1856, &c. Used at Eton, Harrow, Winchester, and Rugby Schools, and King's College, London.

"The thanks of all school-boys, and of many Latin students too, are due to Mr. Yonge. The slightest glance at the book will prove how great an advance he has made upon others."—Lon. Guardian.

"If read carefully, it leaves the impression that Mr. Yonge is master of the Duke's life, except where he quits the broad canvas and attempts portrait-painting. If we want that, we must turn to the Chaplain-General of the army, [i.e. WELLINGTON, ARTHUR, DUKE OF, No. 41.]"—Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 85. See, also, Lon. Critic, Jan. 1860.

"We have abundant reason to thank Mr. Yonge, and to believe that his handsome work will, doubtless, for many years to come, be the standard 'History of the British Navy.'"—Lon. Examiner, 1863.

"The theme is one that will stir many a heart, young and old; and Mr. Yonge has treated it in a manner which cannot fail to bring him honour, and ought not to fail to bring him profit."—Lon. Athen., 1863.

"In the writing of it, Mr. Yonge has had special advantages. . . . In his two volumes he is able to tell over again some of the most delightful episodes in English history."—Lon. Reader, 1863, ii. 627. See, also, Lon. Times, Jan. 5, 24, 26, 1865.

"The very dryness of Mr. Yonge's style, and its want of what artists call tone, gives a not inappropriate effect to his account of the grim and terrible Richelieu, and his 'weak and odious' sovereign, Louis XIII."—Lon. Reader, 1866, i. 58.

16. Notes for Latin Elegiacs, 1866. Commended as well planned.

"There is not a report of a single decision of Lord Bacon; some few, indeed, (and those unimportant ones,) by Lord Nottingham; we have hardly a determination of consequence by the great Lord Somers; and, although he was succeeded by lawyers of ability and eminence, yet it may be said that we owe the present beneficial and rational system of equity to the peculiar national felicity of the greatest lawyer and statesman of this or perhaps any other country having presided in this court near twenty years without a single decree having been reversed, either in the whole or any part of it,—an infallibility which in no other instance was ever the lot of humanity."—DAINES BARRINGTON: Observ. on Statutes, 325.

"He was one of the greatest Judges that ever sat in Westminster Hall."—LORD ELDON: 8 Ves. R., 312.

"We now come to the man universally and deservedly considered the most consummate judge who ever sat in the Court of Chancery,—being distinguished not only for his rapid and satisfactory decision of the causes which came before him, but for the profound and enlightened principles which he laid down, and for perfecting English Equity into a symmetrical science. . . . Viewed as a magistrate sitting on his tribunal to administer justice, I believe that his fame has not been exceeded by that of any man in ancient or modern times; and, the long series of enlightened rules laid down by him having, from their wisdom, been recognized as binding on all who have succeeded him, he may be considered a great legislator. His decisions have been, and ever will continue to be, appealed to as fixing the limits and establishing the principles of that vast juridical system called EQUITY, which now, not only in this country and in our colonies, but over the whole extent of the United States of America, regulates property and personal rights more than the ancient COMMON LAW."—LORD CAMPBELL: Lives of the Lord Chancellors, (Lord Hardwicke,) v., ch. cxxix., cxxxi.

"This work, consisting of two quarto volumes, I have lately perused, and I strongly recommend it to all who would, in a most agreeable manner, extend or refresh their acquaintance with the institutions, the literature, the manners, and the distinguished men of Greece, at the most interesting period of her history. To it Charles Yorke was the principal contributor before he had completed his twentieth year; and, considering the knowledge of books and men which his contributions exhibit, I own they seem to me a more wonderful instance of precocity than the early Latin verses of Cowley and Milton, which clever school-boys can so closely imitate."—LORD CAMPBELL: Lives of the Lord Chancellors, (Charles Yorke,) v., ch. cxlix. "Lord Hardwicke is a great oaf, both in the book he has written, and in thinking it worth being sent so far as to Florence. The ignorance in it is extreme, and so are the blunders. . . . Like his Lordship's other publications, they are all dead before him! He has, all his life, resembled an angler who stands for hours and days by a river with a line and hook, and at last catches a paltry dace or bleak, which no mortal will touch."—*Horace Walpole to Sir H. "My friend and teacher, Professor Huxley, . . . confided the early sheets of the work [Lessons in Elementary Physiology, Lon., 1868, 18mo] to me, to make such additions of matter and modifications of form as might be thought proper to adapt it to the circumstances and requirements of American education. This I have done to the best of my judgment, by contributing eight chapters to the present edition. . . . I have also numbered the paragraphs of the work continuously, prefixed headings to them, and appended a set of questions to the whole."—W. J. YOUMANS.

Commended in N. Amer. Rev., lxiii. 237, (by Rev. G. E. Ellis.) See, also, Chris. Exam., xli. 279, (by W. P. Lunt.) The book was reviewed by J. Wingate Thornton, Esq., (in The Boston Courier of Aug. 26 and Sept. 16, 1846,) who remarks,

"The result of this examination is that, of the volume, seven or eight chapters, comprising little more than one hundred pages, are mere reprints, and of which there are no known manuscripts; and there is only one chapter, of about thirty-three pages, which has not before been printed at length, or substantially, and is new to the public. So much for the correctness of the title-page," &c.

Dr. Young published several funeral sermons and other pamphlets, edited The Library of Old English Prose Writers, Boston, 9 vols. 16mo, (see Amer. Mon. Rev., Jan. 1832, and N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1833,) and collected materials for two works, (unfortunately, never completed,) entitled Chronicles of the First Planters of the Colony of Virginia, from the First Voyage of Discovery in 1584 to the Dissolution of the Virginia Company in 1624, and Chronicles of Maritime Discovery on the Coasts of North America. with gratitude and admiration to posterity."—Annual Biog. and Obit.

"In point of solidity of information and assiduity of research there are no works of Travels to be compared to the present. Agriculture and industry in general are the principal objects of the author."—PINKERTON.

"To the works of Arthur Young the world is more indebted for the diffusion of agricultural knowledge than to any writer who has yet appeared. If great zeal, indefatigable exertions, and an unsparing expense in making experiments can give a man a claim to the gratitude of agriculturists, Arthur Young deserves it more than most men. We will not assert that in all cases his conclusions were correct, or his judgment unimpeachable; but even his blunders, if he committed any, have tended to the benefit of agriculture, by exciting discussion and criticism."—KIRWAN: Irish Transac., vol. v. See Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., vi. (1858) 881.

"He projected nothing new or original, nor devised any different scheme of agriculture in any point; but he collected a huge mass of miscellaneous information, which had no small effect on the progress of agriculture."—Donaldson's Agr. Biog., 1854, 56.

"The works of Arthur Young did incomparably more than those of any other individual to introduce a taste for agriculture and to diffuse a knowledge of the art in this and other countries. They are written in an animated, forcible, pure English style, and are at once highly entertaining and instructive. . . . Though sometimes rash and prejudiced, his statements and inferences may in general be depended upon. His activity, perseverance, and devotedness to agriculture were unequalled. . . . His Tours, especially those in Ireland and in France, which are both excellent, are his most valuable publications."—MCCULLOCH: Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 214. See, also, Index.

The notice of Young in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi. (1860) 960, is a very paltry affair, unworthy of the book and the subject. In the first and second of the thirty-three lines (large type) which are devoted to this eminent man, he is styled "an agricultural writer of some note in his day." He was of great note in his own day, and will be illustrious in all succeeding days, so long as the "profit of the earth is for all," and "the king himself is served by the field," (Eccles. v. 9.)

"Let those that please be in raptures at the elegant sentences of Massillon and Bourdaloue, but show me any French writer whose eloquence exceeds that of Dean Young."—Rev. John Wesley.

See, also, Translation of his Latin Sermon upon John xiii. 34, 35, 1688, 8vo.

Young, Edward, LL.D., author of The Night Thoughts, and son of the preceding, was b. in 1684, at Upham, about eight miles from Winchester, in Hampshire; educated at Winchester School and at New College and Corpus Christi College, Oxford; in 1708 was nominated by Archbishop Tenison to a law Fellowship in All Souls' College; took the degree of B.C.L., 1714, and of D.C.L., 1719, and in the same year, at the solicitation of his friend the Duke of Wharton, who promised to advance his interests, resigned his tutorship of Lord Burleigh, son of the Earl of Exeter; took holy orders in 1727, and in April, 1728, was nominated one of the royal chaplains; in 1730 received from All Souls' College the rectory of Welwyn, Hertfordshire, and retained this post, much against his will,—for he was an anxious seeker of ecclesiastical preferment,—until his death, April 12, 1765. In 1731 he was married to Lady Elizabeth Lee, widow of Colonel Lee, and daughter of the Earl of Lichfield, and by this lady he had one son, Frederick, born in 1733, who inherited the bulk of his fortune, though he had not always enjoyed his favour. The poet's step-daughter, Miss Lee, was married in 1735 to Mr. Temple, son of Lord Palmerston. This lady died of consumption in 1736, at Lyons, when in company with Young;—

"I flew, I snatch'd her from the rigid North,
And bore her nearer to the sun;"—

and her husband followed her to the grave—but not without lingering long enough to contract a second marriage—in 1740. Mr. and Mrs. Lee are supposed to be the Philander and Narcissa of the Night Thoughts. Lady Young died in 1741. It has been absurdly assumed by some of Young's biographers that under the name of Lorenzo the author of the Night Thoughts introduces his own son on the stage; but, as young Master Frederick was about eight or nine years of age when he is supposed to have sat for this striking portrait, we must look elsewhere for the original of the accomplished skeptic and mourning widower.

"The curious reader of Young's life will naturally inquire to what it was owing, that, although he lived almost forty years after he took orders, which included one whole reign uncommonly long, and part of another, he was never thought worthy of the least preferment. The author of the 'Night Thoughts' ended his days upon a living which came to him from his college without any favour, and to which he probably had an eye when he determined on the Church. To satisfy curiosity of this kind is, at this distance of time, far from easy. The parties themselves know not often, at the instant, why they are neglected or why they are preferred. The neglect of Young is by some ascribed to his having attached himself to the Prince of Wales, and to his having preached an offensive sermon at St. James's. It has been told me that he had two hundred a year in the late reign, [from 1725 until his death,] by the patronage of Walpole, and that, whenever any one reminded the king of Young, the only answer was, 'He has a pension.' All the light thrown on this inquiry by the following letter from Secker only serves to show at what a late period of life the author of the 'Night Thoughts' solicited preferment:—

'Deanery of St. Paul's, July 8, 1758.

'Good Dr. Young: I have long wondered that more suitable notice of your great merit hath not been taken by persons in power. But how to remedy the omission I see not. No encouragement hath ever been given me to mention things of this nature to his Majesty. And therefore, in all likelihood, the only consequence of doing it would be weakening the little influence which else I may possibly have on some other occasions. Your fortune and your reputation set you above the need of advancement; and your sentiments above that concern for it, on your own account, which, on that of the public, is sincerely felt by Your loving Brother,

'Tho. Cant.'

"At last, at the age of fourscore, he was appointed, in 1761, Clerk of the Closet to the Princess Dowager, [mother of George III.]"—Sir Herbert Croft: Johnson's Lives of the Poets, Cunningham's ed., 1854, iii. 349, (q. v.)

We have already quoted (Croft, Sir Herbert) Johnson's acknowledgment for this life: we add the comments of two of his friends:

"It has always appeared to me to have a considerable share of merit, and to display a pretty successful imitation of Johnson's style. When I mentioned this to a very eminent literary character, [Edmund Burke,] he opposed me vehemently, exclaiming, 'No, no: it is not a good imitation of Johnson; it has all his pomp, without his force; it has all the nodosities of the oak, without its strength.' This was an image so happy, that one might have thought he would have been satisfied with it; but he was not. And, setting his mind again to work, he added, with exquisite felicity, 'It has all the contortions of the sibyl, without the inspiration.'"—Boswell: Life of Johnson, ch. lxxi.

Boswell's account of his visit with his "guide, philosopher, and friend" to Young's rectory is too interesting to be omitted:

"We stopped at Welwin, where I wished much to see, in company with Johnson, the residence of the author of 'Night Thoughts,' which was then possessed by his son, Mr. Young. Here some address was requisite; for I was not acquainted with Mr. Young; and had I proposed to Dr. Johnson that we should send to him, he would have checked my wish, and perhaps been offended. I therefore concerted with Mr. Dilly that I should steal away from Dr. Johnson and him, and try what reception I could procure from Mr. Young: if unfavourable, nothing was to be said; but if agreeable, I should return and notify it to them. I hastened to Mr. Young's, found he was at home, sent in word that a gentleman desired to wait upon him, and was shown into a parlour, where he and a young lady, his daughter, were sitting. He appeared to be a plain, civil country gentleman; and when I begged pardon for presuming to trouble him, but that I wished much to see his place, if he would give me leave, he behaved very courteously, and answered, 'By all means, sir. We are just going to drink tea; will you sit down?' I thanked him, but said that Dr. Johnson had come with me from London, and I must return to the inn to drink tea with him: that my name was Boswell; I had travelled with him in the Hebrides. 'Sir,' said he, 'I should think it a great honour to see Dr. Johnson here. Will you allow me to send for him?' Availing myself of this opening, I said that 'I would go myself and bring him when he had drunk tea; he knew nothing of my calling here.' Having been thus successful, I hastened back to the inn, and informed Dr. Johnson that Mr. Young, son of Dr. Young, the author of 'Night Thoughts,' whom I had just left, desired to have the honour of seeing him at the house where his father lived. Dr, Johnson luckily made no inquiry how this invitation had arisen, but agreed to go; and when we entered Mr. Young's parlour he addressed him with a very polite bow, 'Sir, I had a curiosity to come and see this place. I had the honour to know that great man your father.' We went into the garden, where we found a gravel walk, on each side of which was a row of trees, planted by Dr. Young, which formed a handsome gothic arch. Dr. Johnson called it a fine grove. I beheld it with reverence.

"We sat some time in the summer-house, on the outside wall of which was inscribed 'Ambulantes in horto audiebant vocem Dei;' and in reference to a brook by which it is situated, 'Vivendi rectè qui prorogat horam,' &c. I said to Mr. Young that I had been told his father was cheerful. 'Sir,' said he, 'he was too well bred a man not to be cheerful in company; but he was gloomy when alone. He never was cheerful after my mother's death, and he had met with many disappointments.' Dr. Johnson observed to me afterwards, 'That this was no favourable account of Dr. Young; for it is not becoming in a man to have so little acquiescence in the ways of Providence as to be gloomy because he has not obtained as much preferment as he expected, nor to continue gloomy for the loss of his wife. Grief has its time.'"—Life of Johnson, Croker's ed., ch. lxxiii., year 1781.

List of Young's Works.

1. An Epistle to the Right Honourable the Lord Lansdown, Lon., 1713, fol.: a poem. 2. A Poem on the Last Day, Oxon., 1713, 8vo; 3d ed., Lon., 1715, 8vo; 1725, 8vo; 1745, 12mo. 3. The Force of Religion; or, Vanquish'd Love; a Poem, in Two Books, 1714, fol. Founded on the execution of Lady Jane Grey and her husband. 4. On the Late Queen's Death and his Majesty's Accession to the Throne, 1714, fol. 5. Oratio habita in Coll. Omnium Animarum cum jacta sunt Fundamenta Bibliothecæ Chichleio-Codringtonianæ, Oxon., 1716, 8vo. See Codrington, Christopher. 6. Paraphrase on Part of the Book of Job, Lon., 1719, 4to; 2d ed., 1719. Subsequently published with Night Thoughts. See Collective Editions of Young's Works, No. 1. 7. Busiris, King of Egypt; a Tragedy, 1719, 8vo; 1777, 12mo. Acted for nine nights (March 7, &c., 1718–19) at Drury Lane. 8. A Letter to Mr. Tickell, occasioned by the Death of the Right Honourable Joseph Addison, Esq., 1719, fol.; a poem. 9. The Revenge; a Tragedy, 1721, 8vo; 1777, 12mo. Also in Cumberland's Brit. Dramat., vol. i. He sold the copyright in 1721 for £50. It still keeps the stage. 10. The Universal Passion: Satire I., 1725, fol.; Satire II., 1725, fol.; Satire III., 1725, fol.; Satire IV., 1726, fol.; Satire V., 1727, fol.; Satire VI., 1728, fol. Love of Fame, the Universal Passion, in Seven Characteristical Satires; The Second Edition, Corrected and Altered, 1728, 8vo: Mitford, Pt. 2, 3802, with MS. Notes by Horace Walpole, £2. Third edition, 1730, 8vo: Mitford, Pt. 2, 3803, with MS. Notes by Horace Walpole, £2 2*s*. Fourth edition, 1741, 8vo.

"A little after Dr. Young had published his Universal Passion, the Duke of Wharton made him a present of two thousand pounds for it. When a friend of the duke's, who was surprised at the largeness of the present, cried out, on hearing it, 'What! two thousand pounds for a Poem?' the duke smiled, and said, 'It was the best bargain he ever made in his life, for it was fairly worth four thousand.'"—Mrs. Rawlinson.

"When the doctor was deeply engaged in writing one of his tragedies, that nobleman made him a very different kind of present. He procured a human skull, fixed a candle in it, and gave it to the doctor as the most proper lamp for him to write tragedy by."—R.: Spence's Anec., by Singer, sect. vii.

"By 'The Universal Passion' he acquired no vulgar fortune,—more than three thousand pounds. . . . After all, Swift pronounced of these Satires, that they should either have been more angry or more merry."—Sir Herbert Croft: Johnson's Lives, ut supra.

"Young's Satires were in higher reputation when published than they stand at present, [1776.] He seems fonder of dazzling than pleasing; of raising our admiration for his wit, than our dislike of the follies he ridicules."—Goldsmith: Works, Cunningham's ed., iii. 439.

"He [Dr. Johnson] repeated two passages from his 'Love of Fame,'—the characters of Brunetta and Stella, which he praised highly."—Boswell's Johnson, Croker's ed., ch. xl., year 1773. See, also, quotation from Johnson, (infra.)

11. The Instalment. This poem was addressed to Sir Robert Walpole on his being made a Knight of the Garter. 12. Cynthio; a Poem on the Death of The Marquis of Carnarvon, 1727, fol. 13. Ocean; an Ode, with a Discourse on Lyric Poetry, &c., 1728, 8vo. 14. A Vindication of Providence; or, A True Estimate of Human Life; on Col. iii. 2, 1728, 4to; 1729, 8vo; 5th ed., 1737, 8vo; 1765, 12mo; 1802, 12mo.

"It was evidently written con amore, and is in reality the best of his prose performances."—Biog. Brit., vi., Part 2, 1766, 256.

The Estimate was to have been supplemented by a Second Discourse, announced in 1728 as "soon to be published:" it never appeared.

15. An Apology for Princes; or, The Reverence due to Government; a Sermon, [on 1 Pet. ii. 17,] Jan. 30, 1729, 8vo. 16. Imperium Pelagi; a Naval Lyrick, 1730, 8vo. Ridiculed in Fielding's Tom Thumb. 17. Two Epistles to Mr. Pope concerning the Authors of the Age, 1730, 8vo.

"Of these poems one occasion seems to have been an apprehension lest, from the liveliness of his satires, he should not be deemed sufficiently serious for promotion in the Church."—Sir Herbert Croft: Johnson's Lives, ut supra.

18. The Sea-Piece, 1730. In two odes, with a poetical dedication to Voltaire. 19. The Foreign Address; or, The Best Argument for Peace; occasioned by the British Fleet and the Posture of Affairs; Written in the Character of a Sailor, 1734. 20. The Complaint; or, Night Thoughts on Life, Death, and Immortality, in parts, ea. 4to: Part 1, June, 1742, 1*s*. Night Fourth, with a preface and title to the whole, Mar. 1743, 1*s*. 6*d*. Nights First to Fourth, June, 1743, 3*s*. 6*d*. Night Fifth, Dec. 1743, 1*s*. 6*d*. Night Sixth, April, 1744, 1*s*. 6*d*. Night Seventh, July, 1744, 1*s*. 6*d*. Night Eighth, July, 1745, 1*s*. 6*d*. Night Ninth, Jan. 1746, 1*s*. 6*d*. We notice the following collective editions of Night Thoughts: I. 1749, 2 vols. 8vo. II. 1750, 12mo. III. 1755, 12mo. IV. 1758, 12mo. V. Night Thoughts are also published with the Works of Thomson, of Milton, &c., and in many collections. Also, in French, translated by M. Le Tourneur, Paris, 1769, 2 vols. 8vo and 12mo. Les Nuits d'Young, suivies des Tombeaux et des Méditations d'Hervey, etc., traduction de Letourneur, appeared at Paris, Ledoux, 1824, 2 vols. 8vo. A Spanish translation by Escoiquiz was published in 1797; and "some unfortunate prose imitations of Young's 'Night Thoughts'" (Ticknor's Hist. of Span. Lit., ed. 1863, iii. 343, n.) will be found in the Spanish works of Cadahalso, 1818, vol. iii. There is also an Italian version of the Night Thoughts. In former years the poem was in great favour on the Continent: this is not now the case; and one of its severest critics is a Frenchman:

"Young has founded a bad school, and was not himself a good master. He owed part of his early education to the picture presented in the opening of his 'Night Thoughts.' A minister of the Most High, an aged father, who has lost his only daughter, awakes in the middle of the night to mourn upon graves; with Death, Time, and Eternity he associates the only great thing that man has within himself—grief. This is a striking picture. But draw nearer; when the imagination, roused by the exordium of the poet, has already created a world of sorrows and of reveries, you find nothing of what you have been promised. You find a man racking his brains for tender and melancholy ideas, and who arrives only at a morose philosophy. Young, whom the phantom of the world pursues, even among the tombs, betrays in his declamations on death merely a disappointed ambition: he takes his peevishness for melancholy. There is nothing natural in his tenderness,—nothing ideal in his grief: it is always a heavy hand moving slowly over the lyre."—Viscount de Chateaubriand: Sketches of Eng. Lit., 1837, ii. 251. Read the whole of this chapter.

"In his 'Night Thoughts' he has exhibited a very wide display of original poetry, variegated with deep reflections and striking allusions: a wilderness of thought, in which the fertility of fancy scatters flowers of every hue and of every odour. This is one of the few poems in which blank verse could not be changed for rhyme but with disadvantage. The wild diffusion of the sentiments, and the digressive sallies of imagination, would have been compressed and restrained by confinement to rhyme. The excellence of this work is not exactness, but copiousness; particular lines are not to be regarded; the power is in the whole, and in the whole there is a magnificence like that ascribed to Chinese plantation,—the magnificence of vast extent and endless diversity."—Dr. Johnson: Lives of the Poets, ut supra, 356.

"He [Dr. Johnson] said he believed Young was not a great scholar, nor had studied regularly the art of writing; that there were very fine things in his 'Night Thoughts,' though you could not find twenty lines together without some extravagance."—Boswell's Johnson, Croker's ed., ch. xl., year 1773.

"No book whatever can be recommended to young persons with better hopes of seasoning their minds with vital religion than Young's 'Night Thoughts.'"—Boswell: ubi supra, ch. lxxi.

"Looked into Young's Night Thoughts: debased throughout with many poor and puerile conceits; such as making 'the night weep dew over extinct nature;' the revolving spheres, 'a horologe machinery divine;' 'each circumstance armed with an aspic, and all a hydra woe;' 'each tear mourn its own distinct distress, and each distress heightened by the whole.' Frigidity and tumour, obscurity and glare, are the two apparently opposite but striking faults of this popular and imposing poem: yet parts are in good taste: he glows with a natural and genial warmth in describing the charms of social intercourse and the blessings of friendship, towards the close of the 2d Night; and the passage in the 4th, beginning, 'O my cœvals, remnants of yourselves,' is animated and sublime. Johnson perhaps caught his 'panting Time toiled after him in vain,' from Young's 'and leave Praise panting in the distant vale.'"—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 67.

"I asked how it could be accounted for that Dr. Young's 'Night Thoughts' were less estimated than formerly. Mr. Hall replied, 'Dr. Young is destined to immortality. I cannot account for the taste of the age in preferring a light and trifling literature, which, being all glare, affords no food for the mind. Another age will properly appreciate the genius of Young.'"—Greene's Reminiscences of Rev. Robert Hall.

"No writer, ancient or modern, had a stronger imagination than Dr. Young, or one more fertile in figures of every kind. His metaphors are often new, and often natural and beautiful. But his imagination was strong and rich, rather than delicate and correct. Hence in his Night Thoughts there prevails an obscurity and a hardness in his style. The metaphors are frequently too bold, and frequently too far pursued; the reader is dazzled rather than enlightened, and kept constantly on the stretch to keep pace with the author."—Blair's Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XV.

"The 'Night Thoughts' certainly contain many splendid and happy conceptions, but their beauty is thickly marred by false wit and over-laboured antithesis: indeed, his whole ideas seem to have been in a state of antithesis while he composed the poem. One portion of his fancy appears devoted to aggravate the picture of his desolate feelings, and the other half to contradict that picture by eccentric images and epigrammatic ingenuities. As a poet, he was fond of exaggeration, but it was that of the fancy more than of the heart. . . . There is nothing of entertaining succession of parts in the 'Night Thoughts.' The poem excites no anticipation as it proceeds. One book bespeaks no impatience for another, nor is found to have laid the smallest foundation for new pleasure when the succeeding Night sets in. The poet's fancy discharges itself on the mind in short ictuses of surprise, which rather lose than increase their force by reiteration; but he is remarkably defective in progressive interest and collective effect. The power of the poem, instead of 'being in the whole,' [sic, Johnson, supra,] lies in short, vivid, and broken gleams of genius; so that, if we disregard particular lines, we shall but too often miss the only gems of ransom which the poet can bring as the price of his relief from surrounding tædium."—CAMPBELL: Essay on English Poetry, ed. 1848, 16mo, 286, 288.

"Young is too often fantastical and frivolous; he pins butterflies to the pulpit-cushion; he suspends against the grating of the charnel-house coloured lamps and comic transparencies, Cupid, and the cat and the fiddle; he opens a storehouse filled with minute particles of heterogeneous wisdom and unpalatable gobbets of ill-concocted learning, contributions from the classics, from the Schoolmen, from homilies, and from farces. What you expected to be an elegy turns out an epigram; and when you think he is bursting into tears, he laughs in your face. Do you go with him into his closet, prepared for an admonition or a rebuke, he shakes his head, and you sneeze at the powder and perfumery of his peruke. Wonder not if I prefer, to his pungent essences, the incense which Cowper burns before the altar."—W. S. LANDOR: Imaginary Conversations: Southey.

"Although some have called its sublimity 'fustian,' and its melancholy artificial, its combinations grotesque, its phraseology involved, and its reasoning sometimes confused, it stands, on the whole, as a monument of the inexhaustible wit (in the proper sense of the word) and genius of the author. Its moral is expressly directed against that of Pope in his Essay on Man, wherein the world was taught to be content with the present, without troubling itself about the hereafter. A great portion of Pope's poem consists merely of a versified translation of Pascal's Thoughts and Maxims; but the sentiments of Young are, with one or two exceptions, entirely original."—DR. DORAN: Life of Young, prefixed to Doran's edition of Young's Works, 1854, 2 vols. 12mo, q. v. for Mr. Nichols's account of editions of the Night Thoughts.

"In his last years he [Herder] longed for nothing more earnestly than for some great high thought on which he might live. Klopstock's 'Odes,' Young's 'Night Thoughts,' and Müller's 'Relics' were, next to the Bible, especially the prophets, the last food of his soul."—Hagenbach's German Rationalism, Gage and Stuckenberg's trans., Edin., 1865, 8vo, ch. xiv. 177.

"The poem is a mighty and magnificent sermon, preached as from a graveyard, on the vanity and brevity of life and the worthlessness and folly of an ill-spent career; on the divine love to sinners, and the great propitiation offered for them; and on the bright hopes of a new and happy existence which Christianity has opened up. It startles by its scenes of death, its dark picture of the sting of death, and its glimpses into another world, where the Judge is omniscient and just. It reprobates in stern and withering language the unsatisfactoriness of infidelity, and expatiates in glowing and transcendent terms on the doctrine of immortality. The imagery of night is drawn with intense solemnity,—its darkness and its vast canopy studded with the host of heaven, all telling of the great God, and proclaiming his majesty, that man may be awed and brought in faith to the acceptance of that salvation by which he rises above the fear of dissolution, experiences at length a blessed resurrection, and is happy forever in the contemplation and enjoyment of his Saviour. The thought and style are unequal. Splendid declamation fills many a page, though it is usually mixed or followed up with close, bold, grappling appeal. The pointed antithesis may be set off against the diluting amplifications. What is original is far more than a compensation for what reminds one of Pope or Milton. The argument, always powerful, is sometimes rather ingenious than solid; and several descriptions border on hyperbole or extravagance. The lines are occasionally rugged, but the work has been always and deservedly popular, as well from its theme as for his treatment of it; and Young's muse, with her skulls and stars, her cross and her crown, has no rival, and has had no successor."—JOHN EADIE, D.D., LL.D.: Imp. Dict. of Univ. Biog., vi. (1866) 1407.

"Aujourd'hui nous avons peine à comprendre comment on a pu admirer à ce point une suite fastidieuse de déclamations emphatiques qui par l'accumulation des images lugubres produisent sans doute un certain effet, mais qui manquent de véritable sensibilité et surtout de véritable poésie. L'auteur veut démontrer l'immortalité de l'âme, la vérité du Christianisme, la nécessité d'une vie réligieuse et morale; il développe ces thèmes un peu usés avec un grand luxe d'imagination, avec esprit parfois, et de manière à montrer une assez fine connaissance du monde; mais ses efforts vers le sublime sont rarement heureux, et s'il émeut, c'est par des moyens un peu vulgaires que l'art avoue à peine. Il a fait de ses chagrins domestiques des épisodes de ses méditations morales; on désirerait qu'il l'eût fait d'une façon plus simple et sans les envelopper d'un voile romanesque. Philander, Narcissa, Lucia, représentent plus ou moins exactement M. Temple, sa femme, Lady Young."—Nouv. Biog. Gén., Paris, Didot, xlvi. (1866) 902.

See, also, PRATT, SAMUEL JACKSON, No. 3. Other notices of Night Thoughts will be found in authorities cited below. Edmund Burke committed large portions of the Night Thoughts to memory; and this I consider the highest compliment ever paid to the poem.

21. Reflections on the Public Situation of the Kingdom, addressed to the Duke of Newcastle, 1745.

"This political poem might be called a 'Night Thought.' Indeed, it was originally printed at the conclusion of the 'Night Thoughts,' though he did not gather it with his other works."—SIR HERBERT CROFT: Johnson's Lives, ut supra.

22. The Brothers; a Tragedy, 1753, 8vo; 1777, 12mo. In rehearsal for the stage in 1727, but withdrawn on his taking orders. Acted at Drury Lane in 1753 for eight nights, and paid the author nearly £400. He added £600, and gave the £1000 to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. 23. The Centaur not Fabulous; in Five Letters to a Friend on the Life in Vogue, 1755, 8vo; Phila., 1806, 12mo.

"I remember when I read Dr. Young's 'Centaur' (you know the genius of the man) I gave my sentiments of the book and the author in the following words of Cicero: 'Qui nihil potest tranquille, nihil leniter, nihil partitè, definitè, distinctè, facetè, dicerè, is furere apud sanos, et quasi inter sobrios bacchari vinolentus videtur."—Bishop Warburton to David Garrick, 1756: Private Corresp. of D. Garrick, i. 75.

24. Conjectures on Original Composition, in a Letter to the Author of Sir Charles Grandison, Lon., 1759, 8vo; 2d ed., 1759.

"I don't know whether you have seen Dr. Young's Conjectures on Original Composition. He is the finest writer of nonsense of any of this age. . . . But the wisest and kindest part of his work is, advising writers to be original, and not imitators; that is, to be geniuses rather than blockheads."—Bishop Warburton to Hurd, May 17, 1759: Letters of a Late Eminent Prelate, No. CXXIX.

"In none of his works is he more spirited and amusing than in his Essay on Original Composition, written at the age of 80, [75]."—CAMPBELL: Essay on Eng. Poetry, 286.

COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF YOUNG'S WORKS.

I. Poetical Works, Lon., Curll, 1741, 2 vols. 8vo.

"You seem, in the Collection you propose, to have omitted what I think may claim the first place in it; I mean 'A Translation from part of Job,' printed by Mr. Tonson."—Dr. Young to Curll.

II. The Works of the Author of the Night Thoughts, 1757, 4 vols. 12mo. Revised and Corrected by the Author, 1762, 4 vols. 12mo. This edition has a valuable preface by the printer, James Nichols, (p. 1424, supra.)

"Dr. Doran has performed the task of delineating the life of Young with his wonted vivacity and variety of illustration."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1854, i. 294.

XVII. Poetical Works, Halifax, 1864, 32mo. XVIII. Poetical Works, with Life, Edin., Gall, 1867, 12mo. See, also, THOMSON, JAMES: EDITIONS OF THOMSON'S WORKS, Nos. xxiii., xxvi. Beauties of Edward Young, LL.D., Carefully Selected from his Poetical and Prose Writings, &c., with a Life of the Author, by the Rev. J. Evans, Lon., 1802, sm. 12mo. Young's Works are also published with the Works of Milton, &c., and portions of them are in Johnson's Poets, Chalmers's Poets, Anderson's Poets, Walsh's Poets, and other collections. In French, Œuvres Complètes d'Young, traduites de l'Anglois par M. Le Tourneur, Paris, 1770, 3 tomes 12mo.

I must add some more critical opinions on Young:

"Young had much of a sublime genius, though without common sense; so that his genius, having no guide, was perpetually liable to degenerate into bombast. This made him pass a foolish youth, the sport of peers and poets; but his having a very good heart enabled him to support the clerical character when he assumed it,—first with decency, and afterwards with honour."—Pope to Warburton: Ruffhead's Life of Pope, 291.

"I know nothing else but a new edition of Dr. Young's Works. If your lordship thinks like me, who hold that even in his most frantic rhapsodies there are innumerable fine things, you will like to have this edition."—Horace Walpole to the Earl of Strafford, July 4, 1757: Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's ed., 1861, iii. 89.

"Of Young's poems it is difficult to give any general character, for he has no uniformity of manner: one of his pieces has no great resemblance to another. He began to write early, and continued long; and at different times had different modes of poetical excellence in view. His numbers are sometimes smooth and sometimes rugged; his style is sometimes concatenatal and sometimes abrupt; sometimes diffusive and sometimes concise. His plan seems to have started in his mind at the present moment, and his thoughts appear the effect of chance,—sometimes adverse and sometimes lucky,—with very little operation of judgment.

"He was not one of the writers whom experience improves, and who, observing their own faults, become gradually correct. His poem on 'The Last Day'—his first great performance—has an equability and propriety which he afterwards either never endeavoured or never attained. . . . He had least success in his lyric attempts, in which he seems to have been under some malignant influence: he is always labouring to be great, and at last is only turgid. . . . It must be allowed of Young's poetry that it abounds in thought, but without much accuracy or selection. . . . His versification is his own; neither his blank nor his rhyming lines have any resemblance to those of former writers; he picks up no hemistichs, he copies no favourite expressions; he seems to have laid up no stores of thought or diction, but to owe all to the fortuitous suggestions of the present moment. Yet I have reason to believe that, when once he had formed a new design, he then laboured at it with very patient industry, and that he composed with great labour and frequent revisions. . . . He seems never to have studied prosody, nor to have had any direction but from his own ear. But, with all his defects, he was a man of genius and a poet."—Dr. Johnson: Lives of the Poets, ut supra, 354, 356, 357, 358.

See Johnson, Samuel, LL.D., p. 976, supra, (quotations from Sir S. E. Brydges.)

"Young is a gloomy epigrammatist. He has abused great powers both of thought and language. His moral reflections are sometimes excellent, but he spoils their beauty by overloading them with a religious horror, and at the same time giving them all the smart turns and quaint expressions of an enigma or repartee in verse. The well-known lines on Procrastination are in his best manner. . . . His Universal Passion is a keen and powerful satire; but the effort takes from the effect, and oppresses attention by perpetual and violent demands upon it. His tragedy of the Revenge is monkish and scholastic. Zanga is a vulgar caricature of Iago. The finest lines in it are the burst of triumph at the end, when his revenge is completed:

'Let Europe and her pallid sons go weep,
Let Afric on her hundred thrones rejoice,'" &c.

Hazlitt: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VI.

See, also, Milton, John, p. 1303, supra, (quotation from Hazlitt.)

"Young's Tragedies of the 'Revenge,' 'Busiris,' and 'The Brothers' are evidently productions of no ordinary mind. For high and eloquent declamation they equal any thing which the French School has produced, either in its native soil or in our imitative country. Though the first is the only one of these three Tragedies which keeps possession of the Stage, yet Busiris appears to me to possess the most merit."—Henry Neele: Lects. on Eng. Poet., Lect. IV. See, also, Lect. V.

"Young, Thomson, and others who followed the same wordy and declamatory system of composition, contributed rather to sink than to exalt the character of the stage. The two first were both men of excellent genius, as their other writings have sufficiently testified; but as dramatists they wrought upon a false model, and their productions are of little value."—Sir Walter Scott: art. Drama, in Encyc. Brit.: repub. in Scott's Prose Works.

"Though incapable either of tenderness or passion, he had a richness and activity of fancy that belonged rather to the days of James and Elizabeth, than to those of George and Anne; but then, instead of indulging it, as the older writers would have done, in easy and playful inventions, in splendid descriptions, or glowing illustrations, he is led by the restraints and established taste of his age to work it up into strained and fantastical epigrams, or into cold and revolting hyperboles. Instead of letting it flow gracefully on, in an easy and sparkling current, he perpetually forces it out in jets, or makes it stagnate in formal canals; and, thinking it necessary to write like Pope, when the bent of his genius led him rather to copy what was best in Cowley and most fantastic in Shakespeare, he has produced something which excites wonder instead of admiration, and is felt by every one to be at once ingenious, incongruous, and unnatural."—Lord Jeffrey: *Edin. Young, James Hamilton, b. in Newton-upon-Ayr, Ayrshire, Scotland, 1793, emigrated with his parents to America, 1801, and has ever since resided in Philadelphia. About 1830 he was employed by Samuel Augustus Mitchell to compile and engrave the maps extensively circulated throughout the United States as Mitchell's Maps; and in 1839 he began to write the geographies and to engrave the maps attached to them, which are known as Mitchell's School Geographies, Old Series. These were all published by Thomas, Cowperthwait & Co., Philadelphia, by whose agency an annual circulation of 300,000 to 400,000 copies was secured. The New Series of Mitchell's School Geographies include First Lessons, New Primary, Intermediate, and New School Geography; also a Physical Geography, by John Brocklesby, A.M.,—all published, together with the Old Series, by E. H. Butler & Co., of Philadelphia. Mr. Young engraved the maps of the first three books of the New Series. See, also, WARREN, DAVID M., No. 2.

Young, Patrick, Latinized Patricius Junius, the son of Sir Peter Young, (infra,) b. at Seaton, East Lothian, 1584, and educated at the University of St. Andrews, became Librarian to James I. of England about 1620; was presented to the rectories of Hayes and Llanine; d. 1652. In 1617 he travelled on the Continent, where his learning produced a profound impression on eminent scholars. In 1633, Oxon., 4to, some l. p., he published an edition of Clemens Romanus, reprinted in 1637, with a Latin version, Catena Græcorum Patrum in Jobum, collectore Niceta Heracleæ Metropolitæ, to which he subjoined, from the Alexandrian MS., a continued series of the books of Scripture called Poetici, (see the Sacrosancta Concilia of Labbeus and Cossartus, vol. i.;) in 1638, Expositio in Canticum Canticorum Gilberti Folioti Episc. Londini, una cum Alcuini in idem Canticum Compendio; and in 1643 he printed a specimen of his intended fac-simile of the Alexandrian MS. of the Old and New Testament, (see Woide, Charles Godfrey, D.D., LL.D., No. 3.) From his collation of the Alexandrian MS. he furnished the various readings to Usher, Grotius, and others, and made notes down to Numbers chap. xv., which see in Walton's Polyglot Bible, vol. vi., under the title of Patricii Junii Annotationes quas paraverat ad MS. Alexandrini Editionem, &c. He assisted Thomas Reid in translating King James's works into Latin, Lon., 1619, fol., and aided Selden (who dedicated the book to him) in his Arundelian Marbles. Young, Thomas, M.D., a man who will be reverenced by posterity as one of the most illustrious philosophers and scholars of all ages and nations, (I venture this prediction in 1870,) was born of parents belonging to the Society of Friends, at Milverton, Somersetshire, June 13, 1773; at two years of age could read fluently; before he was four, had travelled twice through the Bible; and when between four and five, recited, "with the exception of a word or two," the whole of Goldsmith's Deserted Village; in 1787, at a little more than fourteen, being then versed in Greek, Latin, French, Italian, Hebrew, Persian, and Arabic, to which he soon added some knowledge of seven other languages, was appointed classical tutor to Hudson Gurney, of Youngsbury, and held this post until 1792; when about eighteen, produced, in exquisite calligraphy, a Greek translation or paraphrase of Wolsey's Farewell to Cromwell, (from Shakspeare's Henry VIII.,) which elicited the applause of Burke, who advised that the youth should be reared in such a way as to "emulate a Bacon or a Newton in the maturity and fulness of time;" at nineteen, under the auspices of his great-uncle, Dr. Brocklesby, (p. 249, supra,) commenced his medical studies in London; and at twenty read before the Royal Society an essay on vision, which was published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1793; at twenty-one, declined the post of private secretary to the Duke of Richmond, and shortly afterwards removed first to Edinburgh and then to Göttingen, for the purpose of continuing his professional education, at the last-named city also devoting a portion of his time to drawing, dancing, riding, music, and horsemanship; on his return to England was entered as a Fellow Commoner at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was introduced by Dr. Richard Farmer as "a pupil qualified to read lectures to his preceptors," and silenced the pompous Parr by an apt quotation of an opposing verdict of the great Bentley; in 1797 inherited from Dr. Brocklesby his house, library, gallery of paintings, collection of prints, and about £10,000; elected Professor of Natural Philosophy at the Royal Institution, 1801, and Foreign Secretary to the Royal Society, which office he held for life, 1802; from 1800 to 1825 practised medicine at No. 48, Welbeck Street, London, from 1804 to 1820 spending the terms between July and October at Worthing; in 1807 was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Physician to the Middlesex Hospital, but in 1811 was elected to the same office in St. George's Hospital, and retained this post until his death in Park Square, London, where he had resided since 1826, in his 56th year, May 10, 1829.

In 1818 he was one of the Commissioners on Weights and Measures, and in the same year was appointed Secretary to the Board of Longitude, with the charge of the supervision of the Nautical Almanac. After a period of ten years, the Board was suppressed; but the Admiralty continued to employ the services of the officer who made the calculations for the almanac; and a new council, of three members, Dr. Young, Captain Sabine, and Mr. Faraday, succeeded to the duties of the old Board. An amount of labour now devolved upon Young to which his health, seriously impaired by the petty persecutions which assailed him, was unequal, and it was soon evident that the close of his industrious and useful career was at hand.

"Though thus under the pressure of severe illness," remarks his friend and biographer, "nothing could be more striking than the entire calmness and composure of his mind, or could surpass the kindness of his affections to all around him. He said that he had finished all the works on which he was engaged, with the exception of the rudiments of an Egyptian Dictionary, [No. 10, infra,] which he had brought near to its completion, and which he was extremely anxious to be able to finish. It was then in the hands of the lithographers; and he not only continued to give directions concerning it, but laboured at it with a pencil when, confined to his bed, he was unable to hold a pen. To a friend who expostulated with him on the danger of fatiguing himself, he replied, it was no fatigue, but a great amusement to him; that it was a work which, if he should live, it would be a satisfaction to him to have finished, but that if it were otherwise, which seemed most probable, as he had never witnessed a complaint which appeared to make more rapid progress, it would still be a great satisfaction to him never to have spent an idle day in his life. . . . In the very last stage of his complaint, in the last lengthened interview with the writer of the present memoir, his perfect self-possession was displayed in the most remarkable manner. After some information concerning his affairs, and some instructions concerning the hieroglyphical papers in his hands, he said that, perfectly aware of his situation, he had taken the sacraments of the Church on the day preceding; that, whether he should ever partially recover, or whether he were rapidly taken off, he could patiently and contentedly await the issue."—HUDSON GURNEY: Memoir of the Life of Thomas Young, M.D., F.R.S., Foreign Associate of the Royal Institute of France, &c. &c.; with a Catalogue of his Works and Essays, Lon., 1831, r. 8vo, pp. 62.

This was prefixed to Young's Rudiments of an Egyptian Dictionary, &c., (No. 10, infra;) and a few copies for private distribution were thus taken off separately.

LIST OF DR. YOUNG'S WORKS.

1. De Corporis Humani Viribus conservatricibus Dissertatio, Göttingen, 1796, 8vo. This was his inaugural dissertation on taking his degree of M.D. at Göttingen. 2. Syllabus of a Course of Lectures on Nature and Experimental Philosophy, Lon., 1802, 8vo. 3. Reply to the Animadversions of the Edinburgh Reviewers, 1804, 8vo. Positions assumed by Young in his Bakerian Lecture on the Theory of Light and Colours, published in Phil. Trans. for 1802, in an Account of Some Cases of the Production of Colours not hitherto Described, published in Phil. Trans., 1802, and in his Bakerian Lecture: Experiments and Calculations relative to Physical Optics, published in Phil. Trans. for 1804, were attacked by a shallow critic, afterwards Lord Brougham, (whose errors in a memoir in Phil. Trans. for 1798 had been exposed by Young,) in the Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1803, 450, 457, and Oct. 1804, 97. Of Young's Reply, above noticed, just one copy was sold! In vain did the young philosopher strive to arouse the obtuse intellects of his countrymen to the importance of his great discovery of the Fundamental Law of Interference. A publisher, who had agreed to give £1000 for the copyright of his Lectures on Natural Philosophy, declined the purchase, and they were not published until 1807, (No. 4, infra.) See Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. xiii.

"The Edinburgh Review, in its second number, undertook to crush at once the theory of Young and his reputation as a philosopher. . . . This attack, paltry as it was, seriously prejudiced the reception, or even the dispassionate consideration, of Young's views. His anxious vindication, put forth in a separate pamphlet, was unread, and the doctrine of interference was first understood and relished in France ten years later."—PROF. J. D. FORBES, D.C.L., Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., i., 1853, 898: Prelim. Dissert., q. v. for an estimate of the respective merits of Young and Fresnel in the establishment of the Undulatory Theory; respecting which an eminent authority remarks,

"Such is the beautiful theory of Fresnel and Young; for we must not, in our regard for one great name, forget the justice which is due to the other; and to separate and assign to each his share would be as impracticable as invidious, so intimately are they blended together throughout every part of this system, —early, acute, and pregnant suggestion characterizing the one, and maturity of thought, fulness of systematic development, and decisive experimental illustration equally distinguishing the other."—SIR JOHN F. W. HERSCHEL. See Peacock's Life of Young, 397.

Young was satisfied with this verdict, and thought that "Fresnel, if he had lived, would have preferred his share of the treasure as much as he did his." See remarks of M. Arago, (infra.)

Contains a Catalogue of Books relative to Natural Philosophy and the Mechanic Arts, which is omitted in the new edition. New edition, with References and Notes by the Rev. P. Kelland, (q. v., No. 4,) with 43 copper-plates, 1845, 2 vols. r. 8vo, pp. 680, £1 4*s*.

"Dr. Young travelled over the whole literature of science; and, whilst we are astonished at the rich store of materials he has collected, we find nothing more prominent than the impress of his own acute and powerful mind."—KELLAND.

"The admirers of Young will be glad to hear of an accessible edition of his Lectures, in which the text has been carefully preserved; and all who seek information should know that Young is not only a popular writer, but by far the most popular of those whose accuracy can be relied on in a vast range of subjects, and who have actually written through that range."—Lon. Athen., 1845, 196.

"From 1801 till 1804 he held the professorship of natural philosophy in the Royal Institution, and delivered a series of lectures which he published in 1807, and which to this day forms the best existing compendium of the elementary principles of physics. Considering that this work is composed of popular lectures, from which the symbols and technical language of mathematics were designedly excluded, its precision, accuracy, and completeness are marvellous, and are combined with almost unparalleled brevity and clearness. It was far in advance of the time when it appeared; and, indeed, the popular treatises of the present day still lag behind it, after a lapse of sixty years. The original edition, in 2 vols. 4to, is highly prized on account of the beauty and accuracy of the illustrations of the phenomena of light which it contains; but a new edition, in 2 vols. 8vo, has the advantage of containing accounts of the recent progress of science, added by Professor Kelland."—PROF. "Tell me,—how is it possible for the same person to possess so deep and comprehensive a knowledge of two sciences so widely different as Natural Philosophy and Medicine, with its subordinate sciences of Anatomy and Physiology? When I reflect that Chemistry constitutes my only pursuit, and that, nevertheless, I am daily learning how much has been done in that science that has escaped my inquiry, I marvel how you can have had time enough to go over all that you must have required to read in order to produce your Lectures on Natural Philosophy [No. 4, supra] and this Medical Work."—Berzelius to Young.

6. A Practical and Historical Treatise on Consumptive Diseases, deduced from Original Observations, and collected from Authors of all Ages, 1815, 8vo. 7. Elementary Illustrations of the Celestial Mechanics of La Place, with some Additions relating to the Motion of Waves and of Sound, and to the Cohesion of Fluids, 1821, 8vo. 8. An Account of some Recent Discoveries in Hieroglyphical Literature and Egyptian Antiquities; including the Author's Original Alphabet, as extended by M. Champollion, with a Translation of Five Unpublished Greek and Egyptian Manuscripts, 1823, 8vo. This title-page appropriately introduces a great question, (the one by which Young's name is chiefly known —I fear that I might justly add, solely known—to most students in Great Britain and America:) the opposing claims of Champollion and Young to the discovery of the hieroglyphic alphabet,—in the estimation of Niebuhr and Bunsen, the greatest event in the literary history of the age. The unjust charge preferred by Dr. Bunsen in Egyptens Stelle in der Weltgeschichte, Hamburg, 1845, that "on the publication of Champollion's Alphabet, in 1822, Young made a vain attempt to appropriate the discovery to himself," renders a brief statement of the facts, and the citation of more intelligent opinions, imperative.

Dr. Young published in 1814 his conjectural translation of the Rosetta inscription; in 1815 discovered that there were symbolic signs in the enchorial character; in 1816 proved that the cursive characters of the sacred papyri were derived from the hieroglyphics; in 1818 discovered the hieroglyphic alphabet; and in 1819 embodied the results of his laborious investigations in that famous article on Egypt (in Encyc. Brit., Supp., vol. iv.) which was characterized by the Edinburgh Review as "the greatest effort of scholarship and ingenuity of which modern literature can boast."

Now for Champollion:

"At the beginning of my Egyptian researches," remarks Dr. Young, "I had accidentally received a letter from M. Champollion, which accompanied a copy of his work on the State of Egypt under the Pharaohs, sent as a present to the Royal Society; and, as he requested some particular information respecting several parts of the enchorial inscription of Rosetta, which were imperfectly represented in the engraved copies, I readily answered his inquiries from a reference to the original monument in the British Museum; and a short time afterwards I sent him a copy of my conjectural translation of the inscription as it was inserted in the Archæologia."

He adds that, "with regard to the enchorial inscription, M. Champollion appeared to me to have done at that time but little," and that the few references he made to it "seemed to depend entirely on Mr. Akerblad's investigations," which he had tacitly adopted. See Young's Account, &c., 1823, 40, 41.

"As M. Champollion has not ventured to contradict the statement of Dr. Young in regard to the communication above referred to, and as he admits having seen the article EGYPT in the Supplement nearly two years before he published his Lettre à M. Dacier, [Paris, 1822, 8vo,] which contains his first aperçus touching Hieroglyphics, it is evident that he was in the knowledge of Dr. Young's opinions at almost every stage of his progress, and that the question of originality may be as easily settled as that of priority of publication."—Edin. Rev., xlv. (Dec. 1826) 121: Hieroglyphics.

I record the verdict of several Egyptologists:

"The first idea," remarks a critic whom Champollion, on another occasion, commends for his candour towards himself, "of certain hieroglyphics being intended to represent sounds, was suggested by Dr. Young, who from the names of Ptolemy and Berenice had pointed out nine which have since proved to be correct. Working upon this basis, Monsieur Champollion, with happy success, made out four or five others, as also about thirty synonymes, and by the ingenious application of these he has been able to turn to effect the discovery, and to decipher therewith a great number of the names of the Ptolemies and the Roman emperors, together with their titles, which, fortunately, gives us the means of determining the dates of most of the temples built within the period of their rule. M. Champollion seems to be unwilling to allow this, but the fact is evident; and surely he has accomplished too much to stand in need of assuming to himself the merit of another."—HENRY SALT. See SALT, HENRY, No. 3.

To the same effect the Chevalier de Paravey, a countryman of Champollion, observes,

"Dr. Young was the first who showed that the hieroglyphic characters have, in many cases, an alphabetic value, and thus furnished M. Champollion with a key, without which the latter could never have arrived at the important and curious results which he has since obtained;"

and he considers that to dispute the priority of Young's discovery would be as absurd as to say that the inventor of gunpowder was not he who mixed nitre, sulphur, and charcoal, but the one who first applied the mixture to the impulsion of projectiles.

The following testimony, from a very eminent authority, is, on every account, of great value:

"Depuis dix ans on parle avec enthousiasme de la découverte de l'alphabet phonétique faite par feu M. Champollion, mais peu de personnes paraissent avoir une idée bien nette, soit de ce qu'elle est réelement, soit des résultats qu'elle a pu produire. Le Docteur Young, en Angleterre, est sans contredit le premier auteur de cette découverte. Ce fut en 1818 qu'il reconnut la valeur alphabétique de la plupart des signes hiéroglyphiques qui composent les noms de Ptolémée et de Bérénice, parmi lesquels il a bien exactement déterminé les sept suivans, qui correspondent avec les résultats obtenus par M. Champollion. . . . Après un exposé pareil, on peut être bien convaincu qu'en 1821 M. Champollion ne croyait pas à l'existence de signes alphabétiques parmi les hiéroglyphiques, quoique le Docteur eût déjà communiqué sa découverte aux savans de l'Europe, par un mémoire imprimé en 1818, et qui fut publié l'année suivante, dans le Supplément de l'Encyclopédie Britannique."—KLAPROTH: Examen critique des Travaux de feu M. Champollion sur les Hiéroglyphiques, Paris, 1832, r. 8vo.

Quoted by M. Leitch in Dr. Young's works, ut infra, vol. iii.

It is now time to hear something on the other side. M. Arago, after referring to the fact, not noticed by Dr. Peacock, that M. de Guignés, in a memoir printed so early as 1766, had stated that all the cartouches or rings of the Egyptian inscriptions contained proper names, continues,

"Any person may see in the same work the arguments by which this learned Orientalist established the opinion which he had embraced regarding the constantly phonetic nature of the Egyptian hieroglyphics. Young has, therefore, the priority on one single point. It is to him we owe the first attempt that had been made to decompose into letters the groups of the cartouches, in order to give a phonetic value to the hieroglyphics that composed the name of Ptolemy in the Rosetta stone. . . . I have sought for an example in which the parts of two pretenders to an invention may be assimilated to those of Champollion and Young, and which had, on the other hand, reconciled all opinions. This example I think I have found in interferences, even if we entirely set aside in the hieroglyphical question the quotations made from the memoir of De Guignés. Dr. Hooke had distinctly stated before Dr. Young that the luminous rays interfered, as the latter had supposed before Champollion that the Egyptian hieroglyphics are sometimes phonetic. Hooke did not directly prove his hypothesis: the proof of the phonetic values assigned by Young to different hieroglyphics cannot rest upon readings which are not yet made, and which cannot be made. From not knowing the composition of white light, Hooke had not an exact idea of the nature of interferences, as Young, on his part, was deceived by a pretended syllabic or dissyllabic value of hieroglyphics. Young, by unanimous consent, is considered as the author of the theory of interferences; and therefore, by a consequence which appears to me inevitable, Champollion ought to be regarded as the author of the discovery of hieroglyphics."—Mémoire de l'Instit. Acad. des Sciences, tom. xiii., lxxxvi., lxxxvii., lxxxix., xc. Quoted in N. Brit. Rev., Aug. 1855, art. vi., (q. v.)

Arago thinks that if Young had the choice of the two discoveries he would have left the hieroglyphics to Champollion. Dr. Peacock is not satisfied with the verdict of Arago: see the chapter in his Life of Young, (ut infra,) entitled Hieroglyphical Researches. One of the latest decisions on this vexata quæstio will perhaps be generally allowed to be also one of the fairest summaries of the merits of both claimants:

"Young and Champollion contended in their lifetime for the honour of having discovered the interpretation of hieroglyphics, and their friends have not ceased to maintain the controversy. Too much acrimony was displayed by both the principals, and Champollion was unquestionably guilty of unfairness in endeavouring to establish his claim. The truth is, that neither can claim the merit of undivided discovery. Young, indeed, first read the mysterious characters, but his reading was not correct until Champollion had taken it up. Certainly Champollion was unable to discover what Young discovered; but it is equally sure that Young could not apply the discovery, as did Champollion. It is most unfair to say that Young did little when he made the first step, and it is no less unfair to decry Champollion as a fortunate guesser, when we see how little has been effected since his death. The abilities of these two great men are distinct; and, while we admire the patience, the scientific skill, and the varied knowledge of Young, we need not undervalue the marvellous felicity of conjecture, power of comparison, and accuracy which distinguished Champollion."—R. "An attack upon the principles of hieroglyphical interpretation has been recently made by Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, in his History of Ancient Astronomy, [Historical Survey of the Astronomy of the Ancients, Lon., 1862, 8vo.] This writer demurs to the premises on which the interpretation is based, and does not consider the first steps sufficiently proved, but holds that the results have been obtained by a series of vicious hypotheses, and that the Coptic by no means is the language of the ancient Egyptians. He also relies on the fact of the phonetic nature of the symbols not having been mentioned by the Greek writers. The inductive method of interpretation he considers unsound. The objections brought forward have, however, been strongly rebutted by the Egyptologists: the basis is considered sure from the bilingual monuments of the Rosetta Stone, obelisk of Philæ, contracts, rituals, and other documents; the truth of the phonetic value of the symbols is also thought to be proved beyond a doubt, by the fact of the sounds obtained from the first sources enabling the names of Roman emperors, Ptolemies, and even many Pharaohs, to be read with facility; while the fact of the Coptic being the remains of the ancient language of the country, is proved by its corresponding with the names of Egyptian objects and persons mentioned by Herodotus and other Greek authors. The truth of the interpretation is also defended by the results obtained, and the fact that these results enable the hierologists to read with ease documents and monuments newly discovered. Whatever doubt, in fact, may exist as to the minor details and more delicate shades of language, the labours of the last half-century have analyzed and established all the principal grammatical forms and three-fourths of the words of the old Egyptian language. The study of the hieroglyphics has been formally recognized by the learned Academies of Europe as a branch of Oriental learning."—Chambers's Encyc., Edin., v., 1869, 364, art. Hieroglyphics, q. v. for references. His Summary of Practical Hydraulics (from Encyc. Metrol.) was published in Tredgold's Tracts on Hydraulics; and his Treatise on Carpentry (from Encyc. Metrol.) is in the same volume with Treatises by Hoskins and Tredgold, Edin., 1846, 4to; N. York, 1852, 4to.

It was not until 1855 that the scientific world was gladdened by a selection of his Miscellaneous Works, in 3 vols. 8vo,—vols. i. and ii. edited by George Peacock, D.D., vol. iii. by John Leitch,—and The Life of Thomas Young, M.D., by George Peacock, D.D., (q. v.,) in 1 vol. 8vo. See reviews in Brit. Quar. Rev., Aug. 1855, (same in Bost. Liv. Age, xlvi. 451, and see 244,) N. Brit. Rev., Aug. 1855, art. vi., Lon. Athen., 1855, 403, and Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1855, 227. Dr. Peacock had contemplated nothing more than a short introductory memoir as a preface to the Works; but the intelligent and affectionate zeal of Dr. Young's widow (whose scientific culture has been commemorated by Arago) was rewarded by this valuable biography,—for which we should forever be grateful. But no more impressive testimony to the learning and industry of this truly great man can be presented than a list of the contents of the three volumes of his Miscellaneous Works, which are arranged as follows:

Contents. Vols. I., II. Scientific Memoirs, &c. Vol. I. Vision; Mechanism of the Eye; Sound and Light; Cycloidal Curves; Music; Letter to Mr. Nicholson, respecting Sound and Light; Light and Colours; Physical Optics; Reply to the Edinburgh Reviewers on some papers in the Phil. If I should call Dr. Thomas Young the most accomplished Englishman of modern times, and only second to Newton and the Bacons (yet far more learned than all of the three combined) in British scientific history, I suppose that, by some who have never weighed his claims to this just distinction, I should be charged with extravagance; but what other name can for a moment contest his superiority? The most of our great men (though an American, I claim a share in all of Britain's eminent sons) have achieved their fame by pre-eminence in some one department of intellectual research. Not so with Thomas Young. Distinguished as an Orientalist, Hellenist, Latinist, a master of many modern tongues, physicist, medical doctor, chemist, mechanist, essayist, biographer, and calligraphist, he increased his resemblance to the "Admirable Crichton" by his skill in music, horsemanship, and dancing, and in his youth, when at the University of Göttingen, "practised under various masters all sorts of feats of personal agility, in which he excelled to an extraordinary degree." When Edmund Kean played the "Admirable Crichton" for his benefit, he introduced some of the feats of Young as illustrations of the character. If we run the risk of "making the judicious grieve" by thus admitting the fact that to ride two horses at a time, dance on the tight rope, and enact Harlequin with great applause, at a court masquerade at Brunswick, were among the early distinctions of the illustrious philosopher, let it not be forgotten that it is recorded to his honour that he was altogether free from that dissipation and vice to which this perilous season of life is peculiarly prone. Nor did his future course "unbeseem the promise of his spring:" by one who had the best opportunities of knowing the truth, he is described as "a man in all the relations of life upright, kind-hearted, blameless. His domestic virtues were as exemplary as his talents were great. He was entirely free from either envy or jealousy, and the assistance which he gave to others engaged in the same lines of research as himself was constant and unbounded. His morality through life had been pure, though unostentatious. His religious sentiments were by himself stated to be liberal, though orthodox. He had extensively studied the Scriptures, of which the precepts were deeply impressed upon his mind from his earliest years; and he evidenced the truth which he professed in an unbending course of usefulness and rectitude."—Hudson Gurney: Memoir of Young, ut supra.

It is not unworthy of note that he possessed the very desirable advantages of a handsome person and prepossessing appearance. The theme is a delightful one, and I am loath to leave it; and I have a plausible excuse for delay in the adduction of a few eminent witnesses to the surpassing merits of this illustrious man. As early as 1815, Humboldt attested that "there was no field of human knowledge which Dr. Young has not cultivated with success; wherever he has passed, his path is marked with discoveries;" Arago declared that his works resemble the Transactions of a number of separate Academies, rather than the productions of a single mind; and our countryman Edward Everett, one of the best intellectual assayers I have ever known, pronounced him (N. Amer. Rev., xxxii. 110) "a man of matchless sagacity."

"The discovery of the principle of optical interferences, which has proved the key to all the more abstruse and puzzling properties of light, would alone have sufficed to place its author in the highest rank of scientific immortality, even were his other almost innumerable claims to such a distinction disregarded."—Sir John F. W. Herschel.

"At the mention of Dr. Young's name the historian must pause. None of our countrymen has approached more nearly the character of the celebrated Dr. Brook Taylor. Possessing the same ingenuity, extensive learning, varied accomplishments, and profound science, he combined likewise a concise, hard, and sometimes obscure, mode of stating his reasonings and calculations."—Sir John Leslie: Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., i., 1853, 732: Fifth Prelim. Dissert.

"It may safely be affirmed that no philologer ever before made such a discovery in science as the law of interference, and that no natural philosopher ever made such a step in the interpretation of a lost tongue as the formation (up to a certain point) of an Egyptian alphabet. We cannot close this imperfect sketch of one of the greatest ornaments of our age and nation, without adding that in private life Dr. Young was exemplary, endued with warm affections, philosophic moderation, and high moral and religious principles. . . . Dr. Young's philosophical character approached in many important particulars to that of Newton. With much of the inventive fire of Davy and of the reasoning sagacity of Wollaston, he combined an amount of acquired learning, and a versatility in its application, far superior to both."—Prof. J. D. Forbes: Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., 1853, 900, 901: Sixth Prelim. Dissert.

"The most clear-thinking and far-seeing mechanical philosopher of the nineteenth century, and one of its most accomplished and profound scholars. . . . Some of the merits of his works have already been mentioned; but it may be added that they are remarkable above all for their highly philosophical spirit, and in particular by the constancy with which they keep in view the distinction between beings and actions,—a distinction too often lost sight of in crude theories of physics."—Prof. W. J. M. Rankine: Imp. Dict. of Univ. Biog., vi. (1866) 1409.

It might at least have been hoped that the nation which had so long neglected a man to whom statues and altars would have been raised in earlier days, would commence, as usual, a tardy reparation at the grave: the remains of the most illustrious philosopher of his age would have been fittingly deposited in that solemn city of the dead where repose the ashes of the great of many generations. It was not so decreed; but the faithful wife who had long reverenced his genius and esteemed his worth, erected in Westminster Abbey a monumental memorial to his name, and the hand of friendship has transmitted to future times this imperfect record of his deeds:

"Sacred to the Memory of Thomas Young, M.D., Fellow and Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society, Member of the National Institute of France; a man alike eminent in almost every department of human learning. Patient of unremitted labour, endowed with the faculty of intuitive perception; who, bringing an equal mastery to the most abstruse investigations of letters and of science, first established the undulatory theory of light, and first penetrated the obscurity which had veiled for ages the hieroglyphics of Egypt. Endeared to his friends by his domestic virtues, honoured by the world for his unrivalled acquirements, he died in the hopes of the resurrection of the just."—Epitaph, by Hudson Gurney, for the memorial tablet.

"April 29th, [1829.]—Dined at the Athenæum. Hudson Gurney asked me to dine with him. He was low-spirited. His friend Dr. Young is dying. Gurney speaks of him as a very great man, the most learned physician and greatest mathematician of his age, and the first discoverer of the clue to the Egyptian hieroglyphics. Calling on him a few days ago, Gurney found him busy about his Egyptian Dictionary, though very ill. He is aware of his state, but that makes him most anxious to finish his work. 'I would not,' he said to Gurney, 'live a single idle day.'"—Diary, &c. of Henry Crabb Robinson, ed. Bost., 1870, ii. 95.

It was attacked in An Examination of a Late English-Latin and Latin-English Dictionary, &c., 8vo. See Lon. Mon. Rev., 1757, i. 282. Young edited R. Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary.

"Of Edward Young [author of the Night Thoughts] an anecdote which wanders among readers is not true,—that he was Fielding's Parson Adams. The original of that famous painting was William Young, who was a clergyman. He supported an uncomfortable existence by translating for the booksellers from the Greek, and, if he did not seem to be his own friend, was, at least, no man's enemy."—Sir Herbert Croft: Life of Edward Young, in Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

Zenger, John Peter, a native of Germany, commenced printing in the city of New York in 1726, and Nov. 5, (Oct. 5 on No. 1 is an error,) 1733, established the New York Weekly Journal, continued by him until his death in 1746, by his widow until 1748, and by his son until about 1752. The title was revived by John Holt in 1766. He was arrested, Nov. 17, 1734, for "printing and publishing several seditious libels" in the New York Weekly Journal, Nos. 7, 47, 48, and 49; tried in 1735, and defended by Andrew Hamilton, of Philadelphia, who contended, contrary to the charge of the bench, that the jury had a right to judge of the law as well as the fact,—the truth of the libel as well as the publication; and acquitted, to the great delight of the people and deep disgust of the court. "Gouverneur Morris, instead of dating American liberty from the Stamp Act, traced it to the prosecution of Peter Zenger, a printer in the colony of New York, for an alleged libel; because that event revealed the philosophy of freedom both of thought and speech, as inborn human right, so nobly set forth in Milton's treatise on Unlicensed Printing."—H. Mr. Zincke remarks,

"It is a remarkable fact that the English spoken in America is not only very pure, but also is spoken with equal purity by all classes. This, in some measure, of course, results from the success of their educational efforts, and from the fact which arises out of it, that they are, almost to a man, a nation of readers. But not only is it the same language, without vulgarisms, in the mouth of all classes, but it is the same language, without any dialectical differences, over the whole continent."

See a biographical notice of Zouch in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1816, i. 84.

"One day I dined with Dr. Zouch, who wrote the Life of Sir P. Sidney. I never saw a gentler-minded man; the few sentences of bigotry which he has written must have cost him strange efforts to bring forth, for I do not think a harsh expression could ever pass his lips, nor a harsh feeling ever enter his heart."—Robert Southey to Lieutenant Southey, March 14, 1809: Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xv.

Zubly, John Joachim, D.D., b. at St. Gall, Switzerland, Aug. 27, 1724, and ordained 1744, took charge of the Independent Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Georgia, 1760; was a delegate from Georgia to the Constitutional Congress, 1775–76, but opposed separation from England, and returned to Savannah, which his unpopularity forced him to leave; d. in S. Carolina, July 23, 1781, and was buried in Savannah.

VALEDICTORY: TO BE AFFIXED TO ALL EDITIONS OF THIS DICTIONARY.

I have this day (May 29, 1866) written the last line of the last page of a work which I projected in 1850 and commenced preparing for the printer on August 1, 1853.

My first emotion is a feeling of profound gratitude to that Almighty Being, "without whose help all labour is ineffectual, and without whose grace all wisdom is folly," by whom my life has been prolonged and my health preserved until I have thus brought to a happy consummation the object of so much deep solicitude, absorbing labour, and anxious care.

S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE.

P.S.—During the last four to five years the letters from the end of O to the end of Z, pp. 1480–2909, have been revised and enlarged. I read this proof-sheet of the last page of the text (the Indexes are yet to come) October 11, 1870.

CONCERNING INDEXES:

TO BE AFFIXED TO ALL EDITIONS OF THIS DICTIONARY.

DURING the last fifteen years I have laboured assiduously to impress upon authors and publishers the importance of INDEXES; and I have satisfactory evidence that my labours—zealously furthered by the pen of my friend R. Shelton Mackenzie, D.C.L., one of the "fullest men" in literary matters I have ever known—have not been in vain.

My views respecting their best arrangement are so fully illustrated in the Index to the Orations and Speeches of Edward Everett, volume iii., 1858, the Index to the Life and Letters of Washington Irving, volume iv., 1868, and An Alphabetical Index to the New Testament, 1868, 18mo, that an exposition in this place is needless.

"In construendis ædibus, operarius bajalusque, non minus architecto, prodest."—MATTAIRE: Epist. ad D. P. Des Maizeaux. See Bibliothèque Raisonnée, tom. vi., or Nichols's Lit. Anec., iv. 561.

"Commoditas homines studiosos invitavit librorum indices comparare, quibus minimo labore ad id quod quisque quæreret, tanquam manu duceretur."—CICERO: ad Atticum.

The reader will find in vol. i. p. 85 of this Dictionary (AYSCOUGH, SAML.) many testimonies to the value of INDEXES; and I am glad to be able to fortify these by some extracts from letters since addressed to me by an honoured friend, (Hon. Horace Binney, LL.D., the head of the American bar, b. in Philadelphia, Jan. 4, 1780,) now in the full possession of his vigorous and well-cultivated intellect, within six days of his ninety-second year:

"I must say, in references to Indexes generally, that I have come to regard a good book as curtailed of half its value if it has not a pretty full Index. It is almost impossible, without such a guide, to reproduce on demand the most striking thoughts or facts the book may contain, whether for citation or further consideration. If I had my own way in the modification of the Copyright Law, I think I would make the duration of the privilege depend materially on its having such a directory. One may recollect generally that certain thoughts or facts are to be found in a certain book; but without a good Index such a recollection may hardly be more available than that of the cabin-boy, who knew where the ship's tea-kettle was, because he saw it fall overboard. In truth, a very large part of every man's reading falls overboard; and unless he has good Indexes he will never find it again.

"I have three books in my library which I value more than any other three, except the very books of which they are a verbal Index: Cruden's Concordance of the Bible, Mrs. Cowden Clarke's Concordance of Shakespeare, and Prendergast's Concordance of Milton. We may not want such frequent soundings on the charts of most books; but the fuller they are, the more time they save, and the more accurately they enable the reader to explore and retain in memory the depths of the best authors for his present occasions."—20*th February*, 1866.

"I certainly think that the best book in the world would owe the most to a good Index, and the worst book, if it had but a single good thought in it, might be kept alive by it."—8*th April*, 1868. See BINNEY, HORACE, LL.D.; WHARTON, GEORGE M.

As it is pleasant, and often useful, to know the first, or the best, of every class, (e.g., that the first complete printed book from metal types was the Mazarine Bible, circa A.D. 1455; that the first printed book with a date was the Codex Psalmorum, A.D. 1457,) it is proper here to instance Nichols's Literary Anecdotes as possessing one of the most complete of Indexes.

The Index-maker, however, must not carry his laudable desire to be exhaustive and literal to the extent which caused an avaricious and vigilant compiler to base the entry,—

"BEST, MR. JUSTICE, his great mind,"—

upon a statement in the text that "Mr. Justice Best said he had a great mind to commit the witness."

I read this last proof-sheet of the Dictionary of Authors on the last day of 1870.
